RECOVERY PROGRAM

As we were working on this health and fitness issue, fattening holiday goodies were arriving at the IMPROPER's offices every few days. I'd like to say we shunned the brownies and cookies and caramel-covered popcorn, but the real story is that whoever spotted the goodies' arrival at the reception desk was then unofficially responsible for running down the editorial hall yelling "food up front!" so that we could swoop in before the sales staff (whose offices are closer to the front door) got all the good stuff.

Most feeding frenzies were followed by remorse, as staffers lamented the collapse of their willpower. "I haven't been to the gym in three weeks," one groaned, prompting another to confess to having eaten a heaping plate of Mexican wedding cookies in one sitting over Thanksgiving. Add in some bitter weather, lunch breaks spent gift shopping instead of going to the gym, and open-bar holiday parties that made it impossible even to consider getting up the next day for that 6 am spinning class, and you've got a recipe for weight gain.

If any of this sounds familiar, consider this issue a sort of intervention. To help recharge your commitment to fitness, we've got a feature on the newest classes, equipment and personalized programs at local gyms (page 16) and a look at some of Boston's most extreme fitness fanatics (page 22).

Finally, ever devoted to saving you from the perils of dorkdom and pop cultural ignorance, we round out this issue with our list of what's in and what's out for 2004 (page 27).

WISHY-WASHY

I found that your "Wishful Thinking" section (The Word, Dec. 17) provided insight into our local celebrities' personalities. It is sad that most of them were wishing for themselves and not for the greater good of people.

Jodi Applegate: You have plenty of money—buy your own freakin' weekend spa getaway. Hopefully during your massage, you could relax enough to think about somebody else.

Kelly Malone: Do some more public service announcements on the air—you'll at least be getting paid when you think about someone else!

Susie Castillo: Whatever dignity the Miss USA pageant had just imploded. Need a car and shoes? Heard of a job?!

Ming Tsai: After wishing for world peace you deserve fresh powder in Salt Lake. But couldn't you wish for good health for everyone? At the least you could cook up an elixir to take care of that! Do any nonprofit cooking?

Alex Beam: Demanding credibility and responsibility via humor. Couldn't agree more!

These local celebs, except for Alex Beam, need to take some PR courses.

Editor's Note: If our interview subjects sounded self-centered, that's solely because we threatened to strangle them with a cashmere Burberry scarf if they said they wanted world peace, an end to hunger or any of the usual noble wishes. We wanted variety, frivolity and personal specifics, and we thank them for cheerfully playing along. And, of course, we're pretty sure any one of them would gladly trade the best gift they received for an end to world suffering. (In fact when we interviewed Ming Tsai, he was preparing to fly to Puerto Rico to attend a conference on global peace.)

A TOAST TO THE HOST

The day before reading Ezra's "Host with the Least" article (Dec. 3), I was mulling over the catchy expression "the hostess with the mostest." I was delighted to see the saying rejuvenated—and revamped—in Ezra's title. As usual, Ezra's self-deprecating irony made me roar with laughter. He speaks to a broad cultural spectrum, and, like the best stand-up comedians, manages to include far more than he excludes in his humor. This praise is long overdue.

A SHORE THING

Surprisingly for a city by the sea, Boston doesn't have a lot of casual seafood joints—the kind of places where you'd find mahogany booths and brass fixtures; ceramic mermaids and trickling waterfalls; and giant, colorful menus that read, "Our seafood is so fresh, it deserves a slap." Captain Fishbones, which recently replaced the Sports Depot in Allston, is all that and more.

It's not as casual as, say, Woodman's of Essex—there are no picnic tables or plastic bibs—but it's no Legal Sea Foods either. Instead, Fishbones is the kind of place you'd stop by for lobster rolls or fried clams, or to watch the Bruins game while seated at the bar with a bud (and a Bud). The menus are pretty much what you'd expect from a place that promises "seafood, steaks and more." Certainly, "more" is an understatement. Options range from burritos and quesadillas to salads to ribs to pasta to burgers and pizza, in addition to the seafood selections. The entrées are similar to the Sports Depot's due to the fact that Captain Fishbones is still under the command of Matt Renaghan and Jay Arcand, who've owned the former train station since the early 1970s. (The two also own Captain Fishbones in Quincy's Marina Bay.)

What is different is the ambience—in addition to the waterfall and mermaid in the dining room, the owners have installed fancy new bathrooms and removed all but one the video games. Also of note are the five flat-screen TVs that have replaced the Sports Depot's 70 sets. "Our client base has broadened," says GM Sheldon Cohen. "You won't find the rowdy Saturday afternoon football crowd, but it's still a great place to watch a game." As fans of the former Sports Depot, we'd rate Captain Fishbones—no frills, hearty food, killer desserts and utterly unpretentious—a worthy successor. 353 Cambridge St., Allston (617-783-2300). —Erin Hagedorn and Julie Suratt

AINGE YOU HAPPY?

Ricky Davis helped the Celtics beat the Mavericks Dec. 17.

Playing the Bad Guy...

Celtics GM Danny Ainge must love Major League Baseball players union honcho Gene Orza, the man who shot down the Alex Rodriguez trade. While an inordinate amount of attention was focused on the 2004 Red Sox lineup, Ainge executed the Celtics' second major trade of the season, acquiring Ricky Davis, Chris Mihm, Michael Stewart and a second-round draft selection from the Cavaliers while sending Tony Battie, Kedrick Brown and Eric Williams to Cleveland to play with LeBron James. So how did we make out? It's not as if Ainge gave up Bird, Parish and McHale, but the centerpiece of the Cleveland deal, Ricky Davis, is only 24 and has been traded three times already. He's notorious for selfishness and once missed intentionally at the wrong basket in an attempt to get the rebound and record a triple-double. Sample headline from the Cleveland Plain Dealer after the trade: "Cavaliers finally throw out their dirty laundry in dealing Davis." That said, Ainge is the most dedicated realist in Boston. He knows what a championship team looks like, and he knows the Celtics were treading water in the pond of mediocrity that is the Atlantic Division of the NBA Eastern Conference. Maybe this isn't the team that will win the championship, but when the Celtics beat Antoine Walker and the Dallas Mavericks Dec. 17, it was possible for a moment to imagine how a new banner might look hanging from the FleetCenter rafters. —Ezra Dyer

RUIZ ROCKS

On Dec. 13 Chelsea native John "the Quiet Man" Ruiz picked up the World Boxing Association interim heavyweight title after 12 grueling rounds with former World Boxing Council champ Hasim Rahman. Ruiz's win surprised critics who have time and again panned the former WBA titleholder (he lost the belt to Roy Jones Jr. in March 2003) as unskilled and perhaps unworthy. Now the Quiet Man awaits a monumental decision. Jones can choose to duke it out with Ruiz in a rematch for the title or simply abdicate the throne, thereby crowing Ruiz the heavyweight champ. We caught up with Ruiz to chat about inspiration, 12th round jitters and the looming presence of Mike Tyson.

IB: What decision do you expect from Roy Jones Jr. about the WBA title?

JR: I don't expect anything. He's more of a person who the last fight would be enough for him. I gave him everything I had and he's not returning the favor. He's a great fighter, but as a person, he just doesn't exist to me. Every time he doesn't get his way, he's a crybaby. He doesn't fulfill his obligations. I'd love to get another shot at him, and it could be announced in a week or a month. Who knows, anything could happen.

IB: What do you think was your worst match?

JR: The Roy Jones fight. I was having so many problems in my personal life. I wasn't even mentally ready for it. I would like to go back and not even take that fight because I wasn't mentally ready. I feel like I almost beat myself.

IB: If you could match up against any one boxer in history who would it be?

JR: The only person I thought about when I was younger was [Evander] Holyfield. He actually came to my gym in Somerville, and I told my trainer I would love to fight him one day. It was a dream come true to fight him for the world championship.

IB: Who do you most look up to in the boxing world?

JR: I personally look up to my mother. She raised four of us herself and I love her so much. There's really nobody in any sport I could look up to other than my mother.

IB: How many times have you seen the movie Rocky*?*

JR: I don't know how many times I've seen it, but watching the movie and picturing my life is kind of the same. You know, receiving no backing and working for a goal. I'm glad everything worked out for me.

IB: Do they really cut you if your face swells up during a fight?

JR: No. Believe it or not, I heal up pretty good. I have two black eyes on my face and a week from now it would all be cleared up. Thank God for that.

IB: I recently read an article that mentions Mike Tyson as a possible opponent. What would a fight with him mean to you?

JR: It would be a great fight for me. I would welcome it. What I really would love is to have a fight in Massachusetts. It's been a long time since there's been a heavyweight fight here. A fight like Roy Jones or Mike Tyson in Massachusetts, I would love it. I love the fans over here. They treat me so well.

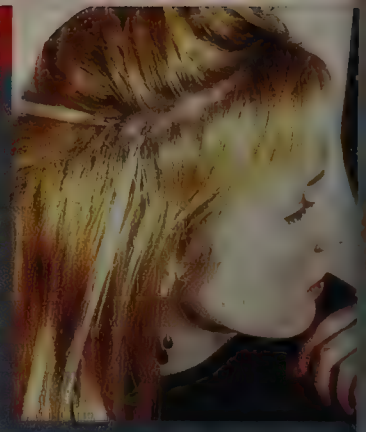
A SPEAKEASY ON BOYLSTON?

A Little Bit Country... Looks like things are going well for the folks over at Faneuil Hall's Rustic Kitchen. Executive chef Bill Bradley just announced plans to open a second installment of his much lauded restaurant (taken over from Todd English in 2002) in Hingham. Chef de cuisine Jacob Aecio will man the kitchen at Bradley's new, more rustic and rural locale, which is set to open this summer.

Novel Idea... Cambridge's Interactive Cuisine chef/owner Julia Shanks is spicing up book club gatherings (which lord knows could use a little bit of oomph sometimes) around the city by preparing special menus that reflect a club's current selection. "She'll do any novel or non-fiction book," says a spokeswoman for Interactive Cuisine. Some recent menus have centered around Gourmet editor Ruth Reichl's memoir, Tender at the Bone, and Linda Greenlaw's Lobster Chronicles. Shanks works with the club to create a menu, does the shopping and then performs an interactive cooking demonstration while preparing the meal. www.interactivecuisine.com (617-868-5995).

North End News... The owners of Brighton tapas joint Tasca have opened a sibling venture in the North End called the Belvedere. Like its Comm. Ave. counterpart, the Belvedere serves tapas in its martini bar/lounge, while the lower level specializes in pub grub. Menu aside, the best part of the Belvedere might be its panoramic view of the city. 50 Salem St., Boston (617-367-6444).

Falling Star... Copley Square's White Star Tavern is no more. After 21 years in the restaurant biz on Boylston Street, owner Frank Bell threw in the towel on Dec. 1 in favor of selling property insurance. Bell started with Back Bay Bistro in 1983, which turned into Small Planet Bar & Grill in '92 and then the White Star in '98. He and his wife were approached about selling the restaurant about nine months ago. "That deal fell through," says Bell. "But the more we thought about closing, the more we liked it, and immediately several more attractive offers came in." The deal is still in the works, so mum's the word on who'll be moving into the Boylston boîte. A few blocks away on Columbus Avenue, Grillfish has also closed. A spokesman for the Miami location reports that the Boston restaurant shut down as of Dec. 13, but he too is holding his tongue about what lies ahead for the vacated space. Rumor has it that Anthony Susi, the chef/owner of Sage in the North End, is interested.



Rewind... The Jazz Age makes a comeback with the Glynn Hospitality Group's newest endeavor, Dillon's, which replaces Barcode (formerly the beloved hamburger haunt Division 16) on Boylston Street in late December. The 1920s-themed gin joint is a departure from Glynn's Irish pubs (the Harp, Parris, Ned Devine's, the Green Briar and Black Rose). Bamboo woodwork and large banana fans hearken back to the time of flappers, and patrons will find an extensive array of Prohibition-era cocktails, as well as a full dining room menu. 955 Boylston St., Boston (617-421-1818).

By the Bay... When the Bay Tower Room took itself off the market by filing for Chapter 11 in October, we wondered what would become of the room with a view. Turns out the owners of Brookline's Ballroom Veronique are salvaging what remains of the function hall. The restaurant is gone for good, but Veronique owner Jim Apteker has kept the function rooms full since the previous owners went into the red. In the coming months he plans to change the name and renovate the interior, bringing the ballroom's capacity up to 1,200. "It's going to be the best thing the city's seen in a long time," says Apteker. —E.H., J.S. and Jessica Iredale

CROWNING GLORY

I've suffered my share of bad hair extensions. Bad weaves. Wiglike disasters. Head trauma from ripping extensions out myself (not advised). You name it, I've done it. Given my colorful history, you can imagine my reluctance when Mitch Derosa of Mitchell John Salon called with an invitation to try the latest in faux locks. But in the name of beauty research, I offered my head up on a silver platter. The procedure's initial description sounded suspiciously like its loathsome predecessors—attaching synthetic hair near the root, blah, blah, blah. Three hours later I was completely converted. Jeanne Snyder, the faux-hair artiste, combined several synthetic hair colors to match my own tone. Then, two stylists bonded the synthetic hair to my own, using a soldering iron–like tool that created a seal which Snyder says lasts roughly three months. The best part = your real hair is completely protected, and only an expert can tell the real from the fake. I've been sporting my new 'do for a month, and it's holding strong. Mitchell John Salon, 67 Broad St., Boston (617-951-0122). $375 and up. —Samantha House

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Women's Work... You know you're successful when a how-to guide draws on your experience to fill its pages. Authors Caitlin Friedman and Kimberly Yorio pay homage to Rialto chef/co-owner Jody Adams in The Girl's Guide to Starting Your Own Business. Friedman and Yorio plied Adams with questions about how to make a partnership work and how to assess goals. Adams' sage advice comes from years of making her mark on the restaurant scene with the Sapphire Restaurant Group. Says Adams of the book, "I think it's fabulous." If she does say so herself.

Middle Earth to America... Seems three feature films with a combined running time of more than 10½ hours, extensive media coverage and DVD extended editions aren't enough to satiate the public's obsession with Middle Earth. Come August, the Museum of Science will be the launch pad for the U.S. premiere of The Lord of the Rings Motion Picture Trilogy—The Exhibition. New Line Cinema and the Museum of New Zealand partnered to bring the exhibition—which includes original costumes and jewelry (precious ring included), displays of prosthetic Hobbit feet, Orc teeth and filmmaking special effects—to the States. LOTR–TE is at the MOS Aug. 1–Oct. 24.

Good as Gold's... City dwellers have a new option on the health circuit. Lean, mean, no-nonsense workout haven Gold's Gym is opening a five-floor fitnessplex in Downtown Crossing Jan. 15. The 26,000-square-foot facility will feature executive locker rooms with private showers, a juice bar, aerobics and spinning studios, and a cardio floor with Broadcast Vision Theatre on every machine. Then there are Gold's ubiquitous dumbbells, barbells, weights and Nautilus. Can't you feel the testosterone? 52 Summer St., Boston (617-426-2929).

Outlook Not Good... Looks like Harvard Square's Grolier Poetry Book Shop is about to lose the independent bookseller's uphill battle for survival in this age of behemoth chains and online retailers. Owner Louisa Solano says that "unless a miracle happens" the store will close by the end of the month. The 76-year-old institution once lured such greats as E.E. Cummings, Robert Pinsky, Donald Hall and Allen Ginsberg to browse its shelves. Solano sums up the problem: "It's called lack of funding. It's called the Internet." People have been calling to offer their help, but "unless someone comes up with a creative way to pay bills and get some new inventory," says Solano, the shop is kaput.

Funny Business... Think you're funny? See how you stack up against the rest of the country at NBC's open call to find the "funniest person in America," with the second season of Last Comic Standing. Talent scouts from the reality show will be checking out comedians (professional and amateur) at the Comedy Connection Jan. 27. If your three-minute bit tickles their funny bones, you might find yourself onstage with executive producer/host Jay Mohr vying for a contract with NBC. Open call: 10 am-6 pm. 245 Quincy Market Place, Boston.

Take It Upstairs... Faneuil Hall's Bell in Hand Tavern recently doubled its size with the addition of a second-floor bar and lounge area. The new area boasts a state-of-the art sound system, which is perfect for the bar's Thursday-Saturday cover bands, as well as banquette and lounge seating. 45-55 Union St., Boston (617-227-2098). —E.H., J.I. and J.S.

More than 550 party-goers attended the benefit, which honored exceptional individuals for their contributions to the community. The event's honorees were Walter McCarty, Boston Celtics forward and founder of the I Love Music Foundation, and Suzanne Reno, an original founder of the MSPCC's GoodStart home visiting program. More than $800,000 was raised.

RANDOMANIA III

Oh my God, this is, like, so random

It's come to my attention that I've passed the 100-column threshold. I'm not sure which column was number 100, but I'll bet it was special. What's important to me is whether 100 columns is enough to compile into a book. Perhaps I should write to Dave Barry and ask how the whole "making a book out of stuff you've already written" thing works. See, I want book money. I've got expensive tastes. These Starbucks gingerbread lattes are killing me. Of course, promoting my book is going to be difficult. I never should've punched Stedman Graham at the Oak Room. But you know what? He had it coming.

Along with hunting and pecking my way through 80,000 words, I realized that it's been over a year since I let myself off the linear narrative hook with a random thoughts article. So here you go: the third, semi-annual installment of Randomania.

*High on my list of People I'd Like to Hit with a Big Rock are Hallmark browsers. Most Hallmark stores are filled with painfully earnest cards that say things like, "This joyful holiday season, our family wishes you joy and prosperity and joy. We are thinking of you so very much it hurts. We wuv you." Then there's a tiny section with cards that offer messages like, "Roses are red, violets are blue. I'm sorry your grandma's dead, let's go get a brew." Those are the ones I like. But if someone's standing in front of that section, you're boxed out. I can only pretend to read the sentimental cards for so long. I start giving the offender dirty looks and gradually edge into their personal space. Eventually I'll reach across and grab a card from directly in front of them, hoping they get the hint. They usually don't. So I'd like to suggest that Hallmark stores install sensors in the nonsappy card section, like the ones on auto-flush toilets. If the sensor doesn't detect movement within three minutes, a trap door opens and the card-hoarder falls into a piranha tank. Now that'd be a Hallmark moment.

*How often should you wash your mattress pad? You wash your sheets. You don't wash your mattress. Somewhere between those poles lies the nebulous land of the mattress pad. I'm thinking maybe once every three rotations of sheets?

*The Dyers were discussing acupuncture at Christmas when my mom brought up a story I'd never heard before: A few years ago my dad's acupuncturist called to cancel an appointment because one of her friends had been killed by a lion. The deceased made the unfortunate decision to adopt a lion that was being kicked out of a circus because it kept attacking people, and it turned out that this kitty hadn't changed his mauling ways. So which soothing words did my father use to console his bereaved acupuncturist, whose friend had become Purina Lion Chow? "It's a jungle out there." Apparently, acupuncture doesn't make you more sensitive.

*Almost as satisfying as finding a nicely stained, solid wood dresser for $35 on Craigslist was the fact that someone else wanted it. I got there first. Getting a good deal is even more exciting when there's the possibility of conflict. I imagined my competitor showing up and both of us running off with drawers, eventually pulling the dresser apart and ending up on The People's Court screaming at each other. But if my fellow dresser hunter is reading this and is still feeling like he or she missed out on a great deal, don't worry: you did. HA HA HA.

I'D LIKE TO SUGGEST THAT HALLMARK STORES INSTALL SENSORS IN THE NON-SAPPY CARD SECTION. LIKE THE ONES ON AUTO-FLUSH TOILETS.

*So far, the only thing that I've found that doesn't stick to ant-killing glue traps is ants. The area around my toaster oven is regularly covered with ants. An exterminator came and sprayed some chemicals that were supposed to kill the ants within four days, but unless I'm now dealing with undead zombie ants, the stuff didn't work. The exterminator also left a glue trap under the sink, presumably to catch any ants who decided to migrate the 4,000 ant-miles between the toaster oven and the sink. I tried putting the glue trap on the counter, but the ants just walk around it and go about their anty business. The ants are winning, which, given the brain size disparity here, is like getting beaten at chess by an Atari 2600. I guess I'll just keep spraying them with Formula 409 and wiping them up with a paper towel. I may have an infestation of scavenging insects and an apartment full of pesticides, but my countertop has never been cleaner. IB

JEFF CORWIN

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Animal expert, environmentalist and Disney Channel/Animal Planet hottie Jeff Corwin was born and raised in Norwell. After graduating from Norwell High, he received a bachelor of science degree in biology and anthropology from Bridgewater State and a masters in wildlife and fisheries conservation from UMass Amherst. He began working for the conservation of endangered species as an adolescent, going on an expedition to the rainforests of Belize, and by 1994 he had addressed the U.N. General Assembly regarding deforestation. From 1997-1999, he hosted Going Wild with Jeff Corwin, Disney Channel's popular series, and since 2000, he has partnered with Animal Planet as host and executive producer of the Jeff Corwin Experience. His camera-friendly good looks led People's editors to choose him as one of the "50 Most Beautiful People" of 2002, and Entertainment Weekly included him on its "It List" that same year. His first book, Living on the Edge, was published last fall by Rodale Press, and he recently established an interactive museum and environmental education center in Norwell called EcoZone. When not traveling the world, he lectures on wildlife, ecology and conservation. He lives on a private island off the coast of Massachusetts with his wife, Natasha, and their baby girl, Maya Rose.

Jonathan Soroff: If you could be any animal, what would it be and why?
Jeff Corwin: Probably a king cobra. I love snakes, and if you're a king cobra you're top dog, the top of the food chain. You're deadly.
JS: What animal from your travels would you most like to bring home as a pet?
JC: Well, my philosophy is not to keep exotic animals, because I think it's bad for the animals and for people. But I'd have to pick this awesome elephant in Nepal, who took me around in the jungle. We took naps together, bathed together and just had great fun.
JS: What's your take on zoos?
JC: Well, I have two opinions. The first is that there's nothing more miserable than a bad zoo—one that's poorly managed, with bad enclosures, where the husbandry and care of the wildlife is not a priority. The flip side is that, to me, there's nothing more magical than a good zoo, where the people are dedicated to the welfare of the animals and the animals have ideal habitats that provide stimulation and good environmental quality. Many zoos have become a final reservoir for species that have all but disappeared in the wild.
JS: What was your scariest animal encounter?

I LOOK AT HUMAN BEINGS NOT AS SOMETHING ABOVE THE NATURAL ORDER, BUT AS PART OF IT. FOR ME, IT'S ABOUT SUSTAINABILITY AND RESPECT

JC: Probably my wife, on hour 27 of the 29 hours she spent in labor, bringing our baby daughter into the world. But in the field? Probably being pummeled by elephants in Borneo, or last year in Peru, when I got charged by a bear. That scared the crap outta me.
JS: Stupidest thing you ever did around a wild animal?
JC: I've done so many, but I'd have to say when I was in Belize, as a grad student. I was studying snakes, and I was hiking about two miles away from anywhere in the jungle when this coral snake crossed the path. Instinctively, I reached out to stop it with my foot and I had sandals on. He bit me, and this is the deadliest, most venomous snake in the New World. It takes about four hours to die from a coral snake bite and I didn't receive the first round of antivenom until about three and a half hours after being bitten.
JS: Ever shot yourself with a tranquilizer dart?
JC: [Laughs.] No, but once I was helping put a radio collar on an African elephant, and I almost pricked myself with the counter-drug to the sedative, a stimulant that probably would have instantly made my heart explode.
JS: Surest sign of animal intelligence?
JC: Oh, I see it all the time. For example, last year, I was in Borneo working with orangutans. There was one about 20 feet up in a tree and I climbed up to get closer, and I was so focused on the animal that the branch I was on snapped and I slipped. The orangutan reached out and grabbed my hand and held onto me, which means two things: he understood what the outcome would be and he understood that he could intervene.
JS: OK, the Croc Hunter: Do they need to up that guy's dosage, or what?
JC: He has his own way of doing things. We have very, very different styles.
JS: How tactful. OK, Marlon Perkins and that guy Jim—think they were a gay couple?
JC: Well, if they were, you definitely know who was the bottom.
JS: Strangest animal?
JC: Probably the hyena. They're cunning, efficient predators. They have a primate level of intelligence. They're so matriarchal that the highest-ranking male in a clan is below the lowest-ranking female, who is usually a scruffy adolescent pup. The females grow sexual organs that look like male penises, but they're actually vaginal canals. For years, scientists thought they were hermaphrodites. How's that for butch?

JS: OK, now what's up with the platypus?
JC: They're awesome! An egg-laying mammal, that sweats milk, with a duck-like bill! They defy evolution!
JS: World's most endangered species?
JC: Tragically, there are many. Today, I'd say the Sumatran rhino, which will probably be extinct in the wild within the next decade. The black-footed ferret in this country. The spectacle bear of South America. I remember being in Hawaii and going to film this bird sanctuary. The guy there was making a giant fuss over a tiny, innocuous-looking green bird that was chirping away for a mate, and I said, "What's the big deal?" He said, "That's the last one."
JS: Worst tropical disease you've ever had?
JC: Oh, I've had rot—foot rot, funguses, skin things—that would make you burn the sheets. I've had dengue fever, parasites in my stomach. Once, I thought I was over a bad case of New Delhi belly that I picked up in India, and two months later, my wife and I are walking through New Orleans. All of a sudden, I was about to blow.
JS: Any thoughts on fur?
JC: I would never wear it, and neither would my wife, but there are people who live in very cold places who hunt and gather and use those materials. I look at human beings not as something above the natural order but as part of it. For me, it's about sustainability and respect. I don't think it comes down to one PC choice. It's a way of thinking. I want to be a sustainable user.
JS: So I take it you're not a member of PETA?
JC: No, but I have great respect for them. They're very important as an organization because they highlight issues and wrongs that need to be righted. But I'm not a vegetarian, and I wear shoes made out of leather, and I view myself as part of the food chain. Look, bad things happen to really nice antelope. I don't think we need to punish ourselves for being living organisms that eat other living organisms.
JS: Grossest thing you ever ate in your travels?
JC: Gigantic worms in Borneo. Imagine something roughly the size of a profiterole, half a cigar long, that looks like a maggot. It's undulating and translucent, so you can see the guts, with a giant beetle-like head that has mandibles. And then you look up and see a bunch of human heads in a basket over the fire, smoking, so you don't argue. You say, "These are the best worms I ever tasted!"
JS: So what did the Masai tribesmen think of you being named one of People*'s 50 Most Beautiful People?*
JC: [Laughs.] I don't know if they saw it, although my show is on in 90 different countries and I've been recognized in the weirdest places. I was in the Himalayas, on an old train with no heat, and this old guy comes up and says, "Are you Jeff Corwin?"
JS: Last question: What's up with the short-shorts?
JC: Hey, listen. I like to be free and easy and enjoy a little breeze. IB

NEW JACKED CITY

LOCAL GYMS HAVE BULKED UP WITH NEW CLASSES, STATE-OF-THE-ART MACHINES AND PERSONALIZED PROGRAMS TO HELP KEEP YOU MOTIVATED, EVEN DURING THE DARK DAYS OF WINTER

PHOTOGRAPHS BY RICHARD SMITH

MEAN MACHINES

Wish your health club had a bench press machine with a built-in back massager and a latte holder? In Boston's competitive gym market, ask and ye just might receive.

BY EZRA DYER

When it comes right down to it, you could probably get a pretty decent workout without any gym equipment at all. Back in the day, people stayed fit by running away from tigers and dragging each other around by the hair. However, like teeth-whitening strips and unlimited night and weekend minutes, TV-equipped treadmills and self-spotting bench-press machines can be counted among the many perks of living in a post-hunter-gatherer society. With fitness equipment manufacturers constantly creating new and improved devices to sculpt your every muscle, how do gyms decide which machines are worth buying and which ones are doomed to ThighMaster obsolescence?

"It's a combination of things," says Smaiyra Million, general manager of the Sports Club/LA. Suggestions from employees are one factor in determining what kind of equipment is on the must-have list. The Sports Club/LA purchased its newest machine, the Gyrotonic Expansion System (which provides a workout that according to Million is like a combination of yoga, dance, gymnastics and tai chi) at the request of a trainer who recently earned her certification to teach it. "You want to look for something that's going to be around for a while and have legs," Million says, "so that we can integrate it into a meaningful program at the club."

Requests from members also influence health clubs' decisions, particularly when members point out something they've seen at another club. "Our members travel, and I learn a lot that way," says Caleb Davis, co-owner of Metropolitan Fitness. "I've had members come back from California and give me literature about a machine they used there."

Local competition carries even more weight, since gyms don't want to be left behind when a popular new machine like the Cybex Arc Trainer (which is sort of a cross between an elliptical machine and a StairMaster) comes out. "If people go out and see other things in the city that are out there, that carries a heightened sense of urgency for us," Million says.

Ever wonder why every gym worth its smoothie bar has a row (or two) of elliptical machines? Brian Walker, manager of the Total Fitness workout equipment store on Newbury

Metropolitan Fitness' new Cybex Arc Trainers and treadmills

Healthworks recently upgraded its equipment with the Balazs boxing system and a Pro Spot machine, which forces the user to balance the load, like free weights.

Street, explains that Precor, the company that invented the elliptical machine, gave local gyms demo models to try. Members asked for more, and the rush was on. "For a gym to remain competitive, you have to have the popular item," Walker says. "There's definitely a sense of trying to keep up in the industry."

But keeping equipment current doesn't just mean buying a slew of new $6,000 treadmills (yes, the ones at your gym are designed for near-constant use and thus cost a lot more than the home models hawked on QVC). Mitch Shechtman, director of fitness operations for BodyScapes, recently ordered a $5,500 Arc Trainer, but he also regularly updates smaller pieces like stability balls and wobble boards. "We try to provide our trainers with the tools they need to work with their clients," he says. "One of our trainers has a client who golfs, and I saw him doing golf swings with a 22-pound body bar. I thought that there must be something better, and the trainer said that he could use a medicine ball with a rope attached. So we ordered two. There's so much you can do with stability balls, medicine balls, tubing, wobble boards, DynaDisc. If you get on a leg-press machine, you know you're only working your legs."

Trade shows are another way health club decision makers learn about new equipment. The Boston-based International Health, Racquet & Sportsclub Association holds an enormous show in Las Vegas in March, and the pages of its magazine, Club Business International, are filled with new gear ranging from dumbbells to elaborate machines that look as if they were built for the Marquis de Sade.

Maria Shea, regional fitness director for Healthworks Fitness Centers for Women, recently ordered a ProSpot machine after trying it at a trade show. The ProSpot is the latest variation on the tried-and-true Smith Machine, which allows bench pressing without a spotter. Unlike the Smith, the ProSpot forces the user to balance the load, just like free weights. Shea also ordered a Balazs boxing system, which features hanging punching bags that can be moved around on ceiling-mounted tracks so that everyone in a boxing class can have their own bag to abuse. While trade shows can expose gym managers to new equipment that they wouldn't have known about otherwise, Davis says that it pays to remember that not every new device deserves a spot on the gym floor. "New gimmicks are coming out all the time," he says. "For example, workout machines that have personal computers built in are not a good idea. You cannot have a great workout if you're searching the Net."

And having a great workout is, after all, the point.

Body Building

Many gyms offer private sessions with trainers to familiarize patrons with the equipment and help them plan a workout. Train Boston goes beyond that: You get a physical therapy–based fitness evaluation specific to your chosen activities and any issues you might have (for example, a bum knee). They'll test everything from flexibility, strength and cardiovascular fitness to biomechanics and functional movement. Started in 1999 by physical therapist Tim Brewster (who has trained members of the New England Revolution and the Patriots), Train Boston offers a unique 12-week program that provides personal attention but also the motivation of a group class setting. Classes get progressively more difficult as the weeks go on, and the focus shifts from flexibility, strength and core work to a more intense cardiovascular workout. "The objective is to ramp up a person's fitness level," says Brewster. "It's a very similar program to what we offer professional athletes in our mini training camp, only with slightly less resistance." Hey, if it's good enough for the Pats, then it's good enough for us. $1,299 for nonmembers; $999 for members.

Sound Off!

Created in 1997 by former U.S. Marine Corps captain Charla McMillian, FitBoot is an intensive six-week training regimen. "It's boot camp—similar to what you've seen in the movies," says McMillian. Alas, you're not likely to be doing push-ups, pull-ups or jumping jacks next to Richard Gere. Your fellow "recruits," as they're called, range from couch potatoes to competitive athletes, and your instructors—all former army officers—are garbed in camouflage and boots. "There's some yelling," McMillian admits. "But there are times when you need to impart a sense of urgency. You'd be surprised what an individual can do when someone makes it seem really important that he or she do it." The class meets five mornings a week at 7 am on the banks of the Charles. The military basic training drills are designed to improve strength, endurance, flexibility

Train Boston's 12-week program offers personal attention in a group class setting.

CLASS ACTS

Group exercise goes creative

BY JULIE SURATT

This time of year, working out gets to be a chore. Who wants to schlep to the gym in the ice and cold, or worse, go out jogging? But luckily, local gyms have done their best to come up with an enticing array of classes to lure you through the doors and get you started on your New Year's resolution to get in shape. We surveyed trainers and gym-goers alike to determine which classes people are talking about this year, and which ones they should know about.

and agility while building teamwork and leadership skills. "Our recruits stand a little prouder," says McMillian, "whether they're walking into a room or sitting at a boardroom table." $350. Classes begin in January.

Bring the Noise

It might sound like a peculiar name for a fitness class, but P.H.A.T.—which stands for Pelvis, Hips, Abs and Thighs—is a feel-good class that lets you shake your booty. "We're trying to create a dance club feel in a studio," says instructor Kristin Burgess of Wellbridge Athletic Club. The lights are dim and the music (house and club) a bit louder than normal during this hour-long class. It's a full cardiovascular workout with a focus on the abdominals, hips and thighs (hence the name). The pelvis comes into play with undulations and hip thrusts. "When people first take the class, they laugh hysterically," says Burgess. "I tell them that it's like doing a bad wedding dance. Their arms are flailing and their hips are swinging." But the best part? "The bigger the rear end, the easier it is," she says with a smile. "We want people to be proud of how they look."

Disco Fever

Club Dance at Crunch Fitness is another class that re-creates the atmosphere of a club—with pulsating music, a strobe light, a fog machine and a disco ball. Gym-goers garbed in club gear (minus the heels) enter through a velvet rope guarded by bouncers (who double as trainers). "It feels like you're waiting in line at Studio 54," says fitness director Franny Benedetto. But is this fitness—or fun? It's both, according to Benedetto, who says instructor Craig Smith teaches the class a few dance moves, and for the last 20 minutes, "we just kick up the music and everyone just jams." The only thing missing is a bartender, and Crunch takes care of that: All participants get a ticket for one free drink at a nearby bar...after class of course. Nonmembers admitted for $5.

Dance to the Beat of Your Own Drum

Nia isn't new. Founded some 20 years ago in California, it combines modern dance, yoga, martial arts and tai chi into one touchy-feely workout. But recently, there's been a upsurge in interest in Nia on the East Coast. Margo Morado, founder of newly opened Casa Nia, says that Nia's creators, Carlos and Debbie Rosaf, were "sick of aerobics—tired of pounding up and down to loud music." So they came up with a class that allows you to kick off your shoes and sway, twirl, lunge and cha-cha barefoot to music. "All the movements are natural," says Morado. "It can be an intense workout, or you can move slowly—it's an individual decision." Instructors motivate the class with exclamations like "Hug the sky!" or "Imagine you're a wave crashing onto the rocks!" "The images inspire you to move," says Morado. Class prices vary.

BAR EXAM

Five energy bars vie for the title of tastiest preworkout treat

BY EZRA DYER

You don't want to be hungry when you're working out. Besides being distracted by hallucinations of pastrami sandwiches hovering in front of the treadmill, you won't have the energy you need to properly flog yourself. On the other hand, you don't want to feel unpleasantly full, either. Enter the energy bar: big enough to hold you over until you hit the showers, small enough that you won't feel it churning your innards while you churn the stationary bike. But are there any energy bars that don't taste like pressed sawdust? We put five bars to a pseudo-scientific taste test to find out which ones you want to pack in your gym bag and which ones you want to use as a sinker next time you're deep-sea fishing. (For control purposes, we used peanut butter flavor for each brand tested.) First, we put each bar under a handsaw to see how many passes it took to cut a piece off. Then, we taste tested them. Finally, we brought them to the Common to see if the local wildlife—namely squirrels and geese—had any favorites. And the rankings are...

The Clif Bar took 24 passes with the saw before a chunk crumbled off the end, which is a good indicator of its rubbery resistance to chewing. Sample comments from our taste testers included, "I think this is for farm animals," and simply, "No." At the park, a squirrel sampled a bite and declined a second helping. While we've tried other Clif Bars that taste better (the Ice series gives you a nice shot of caffeine via embedded espresso beans), the peanut butter version should be tossed—off a cliff.

4.

Right away the PowerBar lost points because of its extreme sensitivity to temperature. At room temperature, this bar didn't have much power, and was essentially a gooey mess. We stopped sawing after 80 passes, but there was still a peanut butter dingleberry hanging off the end. And anyone who's taken a PowerBar skiing knows that when it gets cold it can be used as a weapon or, in a pinch, a shovel to dig out from an avalanche. But it doesn't taste bad, with testers offering noncommittal comments like, "It tastes like oatmeal that wasn't cooked," and "Sticky but crunchy, and grainy." The taste bears only an abstract relationship to peanut butter, but the geese seemed to like it, although they chased each bite with a mouthful of grass.

The Balance Bar, like the Clif, is sturdily constructed and resisted the saw for 22.5 passes. Better sharpen those incisors. But once you get chewing, the Balance Bar has a nice texture, and if we had a couple glasses of wine we might even tell it that it has great mouth feel. Comments included, "tastes like real peanut butter," "creamy texture" and "strange aftertaste." That aftertaste kept this bar in the middle of the pack, but the squirrels agreed that the Balance Bar is worthy of stashing in your gym bag or tree.

This bar tasted the most like it was cooked by your grandma, if your grandma was some kind of a health freak who makes her own energy bars instead of cookies. It took only 13 passes of the saw to break something off—an indication of the Odwalla's nice chewability. One tester summed it up: "That's good. Fruity, chocolaty and peanutty." There was almost an interspecies squirrel-goose battle over a chunk of this bar. It didn't take first place, but you're not an oddballa if you like the Odwalla.

Besides requiring a mere nine passes with the saw, the Zone bar seduced testers with its come-hither crunchiness. Testers said, "Tastes like a Rice Krispies bar with peanut butter on it," "Mmmm, mmmm," and the highest compliment of all: "This is something I'd eat as junk food." We gave the squirrels only a little piece because we wanted to eat the rest ourselves. Tough luck, squirrels. When it comes to energy bars, we're in the Zone.

Wellbridge's P.H.A.T. class turns club moves into a cardio workout.

Play Ball

Acea Theroux, program director at the Boston Athletic Club, is pumped about BAC's muscle-sculpting class, Core Body Sculpt, which combines stability-ball training with upper-body speed exercises. "The class promotes posture, strength and balance," he says.

During the first 40 minutes, participants roll forward and backward over the large plastic stability balls, relaxing their core muscles (abdominals, lower back and hips), while smooth jazz plays in the background. To increase strength and balance, Theroux asks the class to perform exercises that range from chest presses and push-ups to squats—all using the stability ball. The slow movements and mellow music allow participants to truly let go of their tension. "The point is total body awareness," Theroux says. "You learn how to use your body for everything you do. If you can make a movement smooth, it takes the pressure off the joints and makes functional, everyday movements easier."

The tempo picks up during the last 20 minutes of the class as the music switches to dance club tunes. The balls are put aside, and exercisers work with lightweight dumbbells in quick intervals that get progressively shorter and faster in order to increase the heart rate. "Most people rarely get an upper-body cardio workout," Theroux says. During this class, they get that—and muscle conditioning at the same time.

Balance Challenge

It seems like every year, there's a new piece of gym equipment that everyone wants to try (see the minitrampoline and ab rollers as prime examples). This year, the buzz is about Bosu. An acronym for Both Sides Up, the Bosu is half of a plastic stability ball mounted on a 25-inch round platform. You can use it ball side up or platform side up.

"After doing conditioning classes for two years, our members were looking for a tool to challenge them in a different way," says Jacqie Stathis, group exercise manager for the Sports Club/LA. Bosu fits the bill. It provides a muscle-conditioning workout that's made even more challenging by requiring balance. For example, class participants might place a body bar on top of the platform (with ball side down) and do push-ups on the bar. "It works your abdominals much harder because you're working to stabilize your abdominals and core muscles at the same time you're doing another exercise," Stathis says. Using the ball as a minitrampoline incorporates cardio intervals into the workout. "It's fun for members—and provides an intense workout, with an emphasis on stability, balance and agility."

Since the personal training phenomenon hit gyms nationwide years ago, sports clubs have been introducing combination fitness/nutrition programs designed to maximize individual results. Doctors, nutritionists and personal trainers are continuously working to develop fitness regimens that meet their clients' needs—from weight loss to flexibility to body sculpting—and local gyms are whipping clients into shape with the latest programs.

Trimming down and firming up are the obvious goals of most fitness programs. But with obesity reaching epidemic proportions in this country, it's clear that sticking with a diet and exercise routine is easier said than done. Healthworks Fitness Centers for Women is addressing the problem with LEAN (Lifestyle Exercise and Nutrition), a personalized 12-week program scheduled to launch at the women's-only gym Jan. 19. (Call for price.) UMass Boston professor of exercise science and physical education Kyle McInnis developed LEAN using data from the National Weight Control Registry on the diets of men and women who lost weight and kept it off for five years. After a program coach measures the client's resting metabolism and customizes her program to fit her goals, the client receives Web-based software to record what she eats and a pedometer to record daily step count. "Some people leave their home in the morning, drive to work, get out of the car and take the elevator," says Healthworks' regional fitness director Maria Shea. "[The pedometer] creates simple awareness that they can walk around the city during the day and increase their steps." The Web-based diet program allows clients to track their daily food intake (it registers everything from Kashi Go-Lean to martinis), and coaches can log on to see where their clients need to make changes. Exercise and nutrition tips are provided weekly in person, or via e-mail if the client is pressed for time. After completing the 12 weeks, members have the option to join a maintenance program.

Boston Athletic Club also rolls out a new weight management program in mid January. Solutions is based on five components: nutrition, cardiovascular work, food supplements, resistance training and personal assistance. "People often fail with a weight-loss program because they're missing one of those components," says program manager Acea Theroux. "Someone might know how to eat, but not know how to make it work with their body." Members meet with a trainer for an overall assessment—including weight loss goals, body fat, and postural and core muscle analysis—before developing a workout plan. After the assessment, clients can choose to work on their own, or for an additional fee (call for information) they can meet weekly with a trainer or nutritionist to focus on any of the five components. One of the unique aspects of Solutions is its use of food supplements, including Apex fitness and endurance products like on-the-go bars and creatine and glutamine shakes.

The Sports Club/LA's Gyrotonic Expansion System isn't as scary as it looks.

Losing weight isn't the only thing on people's minds these days. Office drones everywhere are becoming more aware that all that time spent sitting at a desk affects mobility and flexibility. The fitness gurus at the Sports Club/LA are zeroing in on those areas with two new programs. Advantage, introduced in November, is a customized exercise program focusing on posture and muscle and joint relief. The initial Advantage assessment ($225) includes two sessions with a trainer. First the trainer assesses the client through a health history, an activity profile and photo analysis of posture and movement patterns, looking for flexibility deficits, joint dysfunctions and muscle imbalances. In a follow-up session, the trainer reviews the results with the client and discusses strengthening and stretching techniques. Sports Club/LA fitness manager Jennifer Green describes Advantage as a substitute for chiropractic services. "There's not a lot of equipment involved," she says. "It's more resistance work and core strengthening." Clients can choose to work on their own, or one-on-one with a trainer for an additional fee.

Also aimed at improving strength and flexibility, the Sports Club/LA's Gyrotonic program, introduced six months ago, is designed to increase flexibility, balance and core strength through spinal movements. It focuses on breathing and on circular, undulating movements from yoga, dance, gymnastics, swimming and tai chi. Clients have a choice of working one-on-one with a certified Gyrotonic trainer (cost varies depending on the number of sessions) or taking a group Gyrokinesis class (free for members). In the hour-long private training sessions, clients use a piece of equipment called the Gyrotonic Expansion System, which looks like a medieval torture device but is actually similar to a pilates reformer. Trainers guide clients through fluid movements on the machine for the full hour. Gyrokinesis classes don't use the Expansion System. Instead members go through seven spinal postures, using a stool for balance exercises.

Finally, the Sports Club/LA is offering a little TLC for athletes who just want to improve their game. Its three-part Sports Connection program ($795 for members) combines training, nutrition and rejuvenation. Included in the package are a sports nutrition evaluation, five sport-specific training sessions (games include football, squash, swimming, basketball and others) with a National Academy of Sports Medicine–certified trainer, two deep-tissue massages and two follow-up nutrition sessions. Whether clients are looking to improve their marathon time with sprint drills or need tips on their tennis serve, trainers are prepared to advise. Fitness manager Jennifer Green recommends completing the program within three months to achieve maximum results, and adds that nonathletes are welcome to join the program as well. IB

GYM ETIQUETTE

You Better Shape Up

BY JESSICA IREDALE

It's 6 pm, the gym is packed, and your only goal is a quick and efficient workout. Claim a treadmill, punch in your settings and you're ready to go. Then you spot him/her: the gym offender. Maybe he's the guy who sprays you, as well as his machine, with disinfectant, or tries to strike up a conversation with you while you're in the middle of a rigorous cardio routine. Or the gal who single-handedly creates a traffic jam on the 20-minute circuit with 20-minute rests between each set, or takes nudity in the locker room to exhibitionist level. Either way he or she is known to repeatedly violate the (unspoken) gym code of conduct and create an air of discomfort in the process. We asked local gym-goers to sound off on their biggest peeves. Read on to find out if your behavior qualifies as a no-no.

"What annoys me is really sweaty people who don't wipe down their machine after use. Also, anyone who lifts a weight one rep every 20 minutes but sits on the machine and hogs it up. Another is when you are the only person on the treadmill and there are 30 open ones and someone gets on the one directly next to you." —Erin, 23.

"There was one guy who was doing leg stretches with one of those rubber spider things, and when he lifted his legs up…let's just say his shorts weren't long enough. Guys: wear longer shorts. For the women, there's just no need to blow-dry your hair in the nude. And spitting in the shower or blowing your nose in the shower…No." —Heather, 24.

"I hate it when people use the gym to socialize and girls try to wear cute outfits. Come on—there is nothing cute about sweating on a treadmill." —Catherine, 23.

"There's no need for people to walk around completely naked in the locker room. It's not your private bathroom at home. We don't want to see your body." —Kristen, 24.

"I hate it when I'm working out and feeling pretty good—running fast, sweating, breathing hard—and all of a sudden, I take a deep breath and find that the air is contaminated with a fart. It is just not appropriate, especially in the gym at 6 am!" —Jessica, 23.

"People who unnecessarily invade your space. They set up directly in front of you in an uncrowded group class, or choose the locker right next to yours even though plenty of lockers are free, or put their mat directly in line with yours in yoga so you can't help but bump arms. It's so inconsiderate." —Claudia, 31

"I guess my pet peeve is people who think that they own the gym. A few months ago there was this lady who wanted to use a machine I was on because it was part of her circuit training, so I let her work in. Thirty seconds later she was back and belligerent because she wanted to use it again, and she didn't want to wait for me to finish my set. She ended up getting the manager and making a big scene. Afterwards, other people in the gym came over and sympathized." —Wilson, 27.

Boston Athletic Club's Solutions program begins with an overall health assessment (below). BAC program director and trainer Acea Theroux gives a client some one-on-one time (right).

FITNESS FANATICS

FROM RUNNING ULTRAMARATHONS TO CLIMBING NEW ENGLAND'S HIGHEST MOUNTAINS, NO WORKOUT IS TOO TOUGH FOR THESE EXTREME EXERCISERS.

IN APRIL 2003, CARILLI WAS DIAGNOSED WITH A LOCALIZED, NONINVASIVE FORM OF BREAST CANCER. SHE REQUIRED RADIATION TREATMENTS, BUT NOTHING COULD THROW HER OFF HER FITNESS REGIMEN.

BY KRISTEN PAULSON

They work full-time jobs all week—then they work out. On weekends, they compete in triathlons, climb icy slopes, run for hours and hoist their bikes over barriers in cyclocross competitions. These extreme exercisers know mysterious things we don't know—and may not want to—like their body fat percentage and how dehydrated they can get before they'll get sick. They do it all because they love the outdoors, or are fond of their fit reflection—or perhaps because they can't help themselves. Here's a closer look at what makes four ultra-active Bostonians tick.

TRI-CITY TRAINER

Teri Carilli's job as an engineering manager for Adobe Systems takes her to Seattle, Wash., and San Jose, Calif., for one week at a time every month or so.

Unlike many of us, however, Carilli, 41, doesn't use travel as an excuse to skip a workout. She exercises daily on the road; if she misses a day, she works out twice the following day. Her unique way of staying motivated is to put a sticker on her calendar after each workout. "At the end of the month, I love seeing 31 stickers," she says. When training for a race, Carilli also keeps a fitness log.

In Seattle, she trains with weights and takes spinning classes as a member of the city's Sound Mind and Body Gym. If the weather is nice, she'll head to Green Lake's three-mile circuit and run several loops. "After restaurant and hotel food, exercise makes me feel normal again," she explains.

When in San Jose, Carilli uses a travel pass to gain access to the city's Gold's Gym (she's a member of her local Gold's in Arlington), where she lifts weights and runs on a treadmill. If it's a Thursday, she attends a friend's spinning class at another Gold's Gym in nearby Mountain View. Sometimes, she and her friend bicycle in Palo Alto; Carilli often brings her bike with her on her trips.

Back home in Arlington, Carilli pumps iron three days a week at Gold's and runs on alternate days—on the treadmill when the weather is bad, or outdoors for six to 12 miles. "If I'm training for a marathon, the mileage goes up," she says.

So far Carilli has run the New York City and Boston marathons. On fall weekends, she runs road races, competes as part of the women's cycling team Dansko Love, or participates in cyclocross—sort of an obstacle course for bikes.

Her first taste of cyclocross came in 1999, when she watched the national championships in Fort Devens, Mass. The sport's fast, three-kilometer courses feature a mix of terrain, from narrow single track through wooded areas, to sandpits, steep grassy hills and 16-inch barriers that participants carry their bikes over. Carilli also enjoys rock climbing, snowboarding and cross-country skiing.

In April, Carilli was diagnosed with a localized, noninvasive form of breast cancer. She required radiation treatments, but nothing could throw her off her fitness regimen. "Having a routine and workouts and being able to stay focused really helped keep me sane," she says. She rode her bike 16 miles (a sprint really) daily to her treatments in Waltham. Last July, she rode a "century," 100 miles in one day, with a local bike group. It was a hilly ride on a warm day. All the while, Carilli says, she would tell herself, "You can still do this. If you can do this, you're fine."

NUMBER CRUNCHER

Most athletes are content to excel at one sport. Phil Johnson, 35, can't stop there.

On October 25, the triathlete from Reading, Mass., completed the Great Floridian—his first Ironman competition—in Clermont, Fla. Altogether, he swam 2.4 miles, biked 112 and ran 26.2.

"My time was awful," he confesses sotto voce, as if hiding a shameful secret. "Medical people told me to stop. I threw up for an hour because I wasn't drinking enough water. It was 100 degrees on the bike course—I still have weird burn marks on my back where I missed applying sunscreen."

To prepare for the Great Floridian, Johnson, who works in sales at Cambridge-based Funk Software, trained 20 hours per week from May through October. His training consisted of a weekly 100- to 140-mile bike ride (taking five to six hours on Saturdays), weight training at the Cambridge Racquet & Fitness Club, and swimming in Walden Pond and North Andover's Styles Pond. "My training has been out of control this [past] year," he admits.

Johnson prefers Olympic-length races—mere one-mile swims, 40-kilometer bike rides and 10-kilometer runs—to Ironman triathlons. "I compete, but I'm not number one in my age group," he sighs. "There are so many good triathletes in New England."

An admitted type A personality, Johnson is driven by a fear of aging and a desire to look buff for class reunions. Racing is fun for him—he says he enjoys the competition and meeting people.

Johnson's fitness mania started in the late 1980s when he found himself 30 pounds heavier than his high school weight of just a few years earlier. He started running, which he'd always enjoyed, and within about four months had trimmed his 5'10" frame down to 139 pounds. Light and fast, he began to train for marathons by running 40 miles a week and eventually averaged 60 to 80 miles per week, punctuated by frequent road races. He even ran the Boston Marathon a few times (though he says he did "terribly"). Then, in 1995, a running buddy introduced him to Massachusetts-based triathlon club Team Psycho.

For Johnson, joining a club provided additional motivation. "It's good guidance," he says. "My training got a lot more specific with the group. I did more sprint workouts, and I'm always meeting people to run with."

When he's not preparing for a race, Johnson, who works out at Cambridge Racquet & Fitness Club, does base training to maintain his fitness level. To track his progress, he keeps a daily fitness log on a Microsoft Excel spreadsheet, charts his heart rate on his laptop using a Polar heart rate monitor and Polar Performance software, and weighs himself twice a day. During a typical "easy" base-training week in the winter, Johnson works out twice a day, five days a week. That adds up to 15 hours of running, lifting weights, taking spinning classes and cycling at home on his CompuTrainer—a computerized stationary bike.

For added flexibility, Johnson takes Bikram yoga twice a week (in a room heated to 90 degrees). He also surfs twice a month year-round at Good Harbor Beach in Gloucester or at Hampton Beach in New Hampshire.

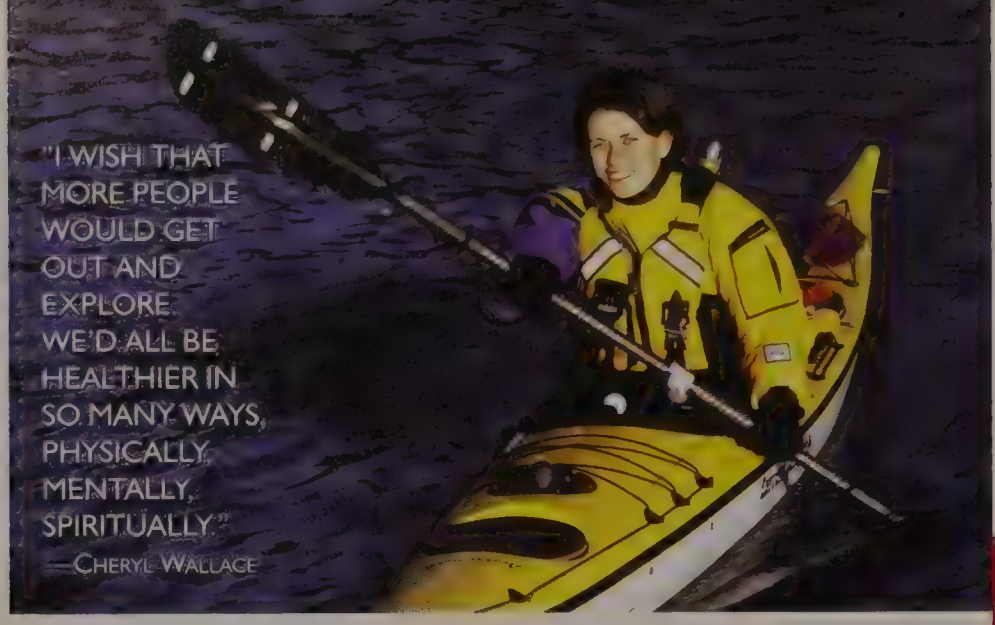
FJORD EXPLORER

Cheryl Wallace smiles around the lopsided bump on her lip where eight stitches were recently removed—the vestiges of a mountain biking face plant.

Still, she doesn't plan on slowing down.

Aside from mountain biking, the driven 42-year-old kayaks, hikes, ice climbs, runs, fly-fishes, snowshoes, skis cross-country and canoes, to name a few of her seemingly inexhaustible list of outdoor pursuits. Despite how tiring all this activity may sound, Wallace says, "I never feel like I'm working out—I feel like I'm on a big adventure."

Wallace, a marketing consultant who lives in Arlington, is also a trainer with Leave No Trace—a nonprofit that promotes responsible outdoor recreation—and a registered Maine sea kayak guide. This co-founder of the Sea Chicks kayaking club has paddled Alaska's Glacier Bay and North Carolina's Outer Banks and leads outdoor trips throughout New England with Wild Women Outfitters. Closer to home, she enjoys paddling to Grave's Lighthouse in Boston Harbor and traversing the locks of the Charles River.



Out of the water, the intrepid explorer has ridden her bike around Ireland and gone ice climbing in North Conway, N.H. Recently, Wallace spent a week with friends at Lake Placid in upstate New York, climbing in the Adirondacks and scaling Mount Marcy (elevation 5,344 feet).

Soon, Wallace plans to climb California's Mount Whitney (elevation 14,494 feet) with a group of friends and spend a week in the White Mountains with Chicks with Picks, an elite women's climbing group. To relax this winter on weekends, she says she hopes to climb every one of New England's 67 4,000-foot peaks.

Just for fun.

Wallace's love of beauty, teaching, learning and keeping fit keep her in constant motion. Her interest started early.

"I became goal oriented in ninth grade when I started running. My coach said, 'If you plan for nothing, you get nothing. How fast do you want to be?'" Wallace set a goal to break the five-minute mile, met it, and thought, "This goal stuff works." She has remained active ever since. "There is always a next event for me. Early on, my goals centered around times and competing. But now my goals are more adventure based. I would love to become qualified to climb the world's highest peaks. I'd love to paddle around Ireland, the coast of South America, anywhere there's water."

The avid climber explains her motivation: "When I stand at the top of a mountain, the view is so beautiful. I can't help thinking so many people would enjoy the same sight," she explains, her piercing blue eyes emphasizing her zeal. "I love the solitude at the top, and yet I always think about how much other people are missing out on, about the fact that they will never get to see the 360-degree view from the top of Mount Lafayette, for instance. On one hand, I like that I have it all to myself, yet I wish that more people would get out and explore. We'd all be healthier in so many ways, physically, mentally, spiritually."

To stay conditioned for all that exploring, Wallace uses weight and endurance training to "enhance performance and avoid injury" (a phrase she repeats frequently, like a mantra). Three times a week, she works with personal trainer Beth Wyatt at the Porter Square Healthworks gym, where she combines stretches, crunches, isometric exercises and weight training—all designed to increase her bone density and prevent osteoporosis. For endurance training, she bicycles (or opts for an indoor exercise bike in the winter), uses the StairMaster and runs 45 to 60 minutes twice a week.

FANATIC FUEL

Our fitness fanatics take varied approaches to getting the nutrition they need to keep up their exhausting pace. Some consult with medical or nutrition professionals and count calories religiously. Some mostly listen to what their body tells them. Here's a peek at what our eager exercisers eat.

MORE, PLEASE

"Part of the reason I love working out is so I can eat more," says Teri Carilli. She eats a lot of fruit and smoothies. For lunch, she eats a big salad with half a sandwich, fruit and yogurt. Dinner is almost anything, including pasta and red meat, and she says her vice is ice cream. Normally, she explains, "I aim for somewhere around 2,000 calories a day and try to make it a good mix of fruit, veggies, protein and carbs. But obviously this changes depending on the level of training I'm doing. For instance, in the century (100-mile bike ride), a person would burn off 1,500 to 2,000 calories or so. I get to eat lots more after a ride like that."

BALANCING ACT

Phil Johnson received help from nutritionist Nancy Clark to fine-tune his eating. He runs in the morning to jump-start his metabolism and usually has a homemade protein shake at around 9 am. He nibbles Balance Bars every few hours to keeps his metabolism going, but generally he tries to stick with a 40-30-30 eating plan (40 percent of calories from protein and 30 percent each from fats and carbohydrates). "I eat tiny meals throughout the day and my biggest meal at night, which I know isn't good," he says. "My wife prepares a meal, and it's the only time I get to see her."

MEGA MILLIGRAMS

After having bloodwork to test for vitamin depletions, Cheryl Wallace follows a regimen of about 18 supplements daily, including a 3,000 mg omega-3 fatty acid supplement for cardiac health, emotional well-being and joint health, and 650 mg of chondroitin-glucosamine complex for joint health. She eats four small meals a day, drinks coffee, and, because she has trouble keeping weight on, makes this breakfast smoothie from a recipe her personal trainer, Beth Wyatt, gave her:

Beth Wyatt's Smoothie

In blender, combine one tablespoon peanut butter, 8 ounces soy milk, ½ cup low-fat plain yogurt, fruit (strawberries, blueberries, a banana, an apple or a pear), one heaping teaspoon of glutamine (for protein synthesis and workout recovery) and one tablespoon flaxseed oil.

ULTRA ENERGIZED

During a 100-mile race, Don Allison eats easily digestible items that are high in carbohydrates, like chicken soup (the salt replaces the sodium lost through sweat) and turkey sandwiches. He avoids simple sugars to keep his metabolism at baseline. "I don't count calories at all," he says, describing his philosophy as, "Eat when you are hungry; sleep when you are tired."

This wilderness superheroine-in-training has also added one other accomplishment to her extensive outdoor resume: modeling. In a rare moment of stillness, Wallace was photographed by Vermont outdoor gear company Orvis for its 2002 catalogue. She's shown kneeling in the water and smiling as she displays her catch of a huge striped bass.

ULTRAMARATHON MAN

In the early 1990s, when Don Allison was in his late 30s and working at New England Runner magazine, he saw a copy of UltraRunning, a Massachusetts-based magazine for people with a passion for running "ultras," or races exceeding the standard marathon distance of 26 miles.

Ultras sounded interesting to Allison. "If all these people are doing it, I should be able to do it too," he thought. At that point, the 5' 9", 150-pound fitness enthusiast had been running for 15 years and thought, why not do an ultra? His first was the New England 50-Mile Championship in 1992, and he has since completed 30 ultradistance runs (in addition to 50 marathons and two Ironman triathlons). Merging his newfound passion with his career, Allison sought and obtained an editor position at UltraRunning in 1996 and is now the magazine's publisher, having bought the publication from the previous owners in 2000.

Did 50 miles seem daunting at first?

"It was a formidable distance," he recalls. "It scared me a little bit." To put it in perspective, Allison focused on how many hours it might take. People go skiing all day, he reasoned, why not run all day? After all, "fresh air," he says, "is one of the great joys of life."

With the primary goal of finishing each race (time is secondary in ultras), Allison works out six days per week, and his minimum workout consists of 60 to 90 minutes of steady aerobic activity. "I also do a lot of cross-training, such as bike riding, swimming and hiking." Doing a variety of exercises rather than just running is easier on muscles, tendons and connective tissue, Allison adds. He works out at World Gym in Weymouth, where he lives, or at the Brandeis University gym in Waltham, lifting weights, stretching and doing chin-ups, dips, hip flexor exercises and crunches. In all seasons Allison likes to run and hike the Skyline Trail at the Blue Hills Reservation (he once did a 10-hour workout there).

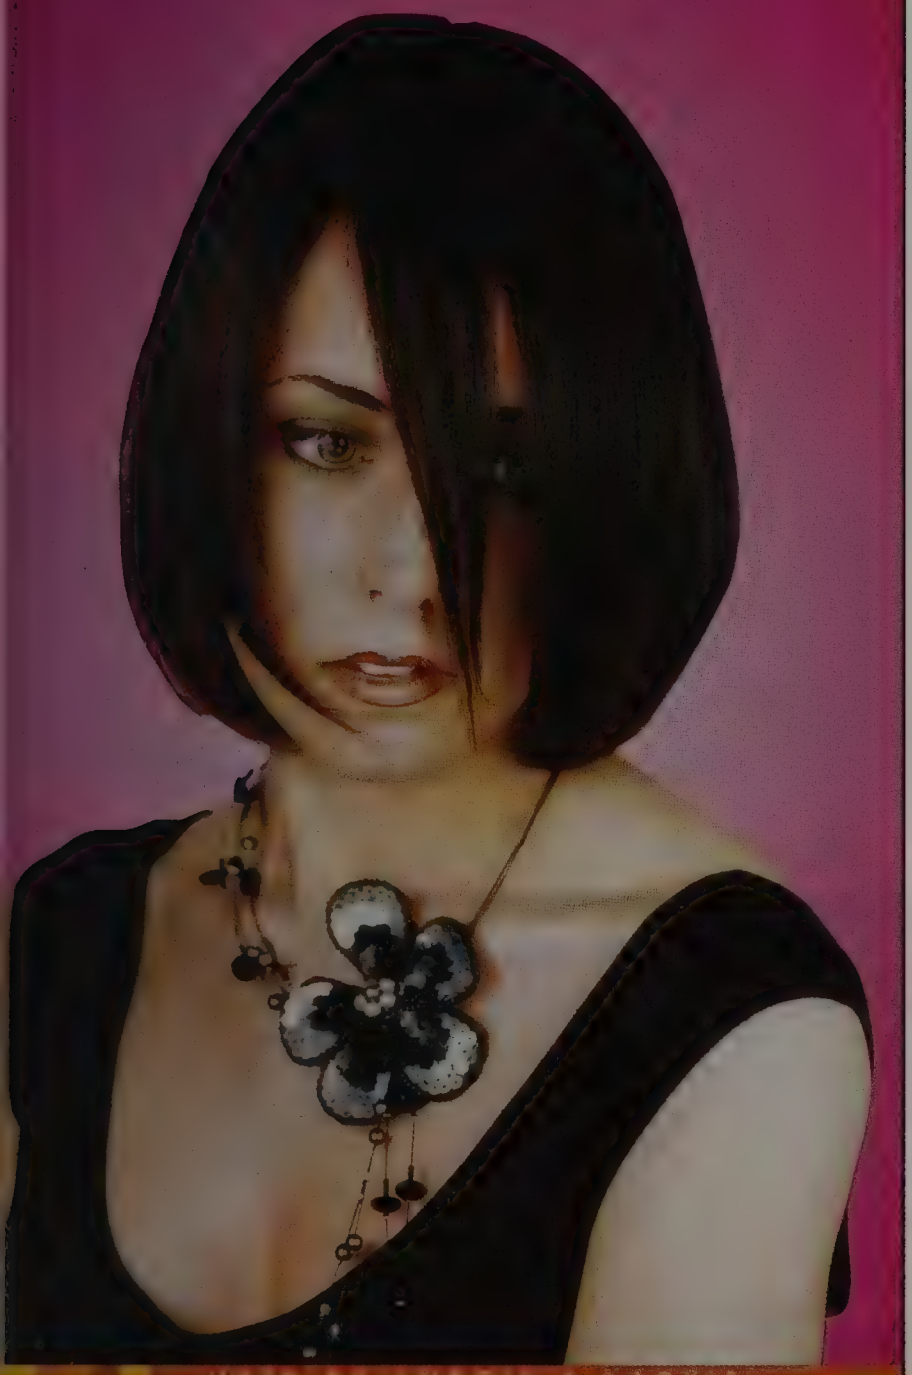
But how does he race 50 miles?

Step by step, apparently.

"There's a saying in ultrarunning: It doesn't always get worse. You can work your way out of it [if you're feeling bad]," Allison explains.

During the Vermont 100-Mile Endurance Run—which takes many participants more than 24 hours to complete—he set small goals, such as getting to the next aid station or running three more miles. "The task would seem too formidable if I said I had 37 miles left," says Allison.

In ultras, it's not about endorphin highs as much as it's about coping with dramatic mood swings. Running the Western States 100-Miler in 2000, Allison felt like stopping at mile 70, but his pacer told him to continue.



"Do you want me to fall flat on my face?" asked Allison. "Yes," replied the pacer. Thus annoyed—and encouraged—Allison ran the remaining 30 miles.

Building flexibility into his workout regimen is key. When he doesn't feel motivated, Allison employs tricks like allowing himself to skip a day, or breaking his workout into 15-minute segments.

Whatever length the race, Allison competes only with himself. What keeps him going, ultra to ultra, is staying fit, seeing the country and meeting his goals.

"I'll keep going as best as I can," he says. "Right now, I'm looking forward to my run in about an hour." IB

THE VARIETIES OF ANXIETY

Finding Serenity in the Age of Anxiety* is a new book by local psychotherapist Robert Gerzon.

Anxiety, that unfriendly inner chattering, would appear to have only negative connotations. People dread it, medicate it, get paralyzed by it. What good does anxiety do? Psychotherapist Robert Gerzon manages to first divide anxiety into types: toxic, natural and sacred. The worst kind, toxic anxiety, causes fear, distraction and negative anticipation, regardless of whether those feelings are warranted. By contrast, natural anxiety serves as a realistic "seat belt" against tangible dangers, but it also traps you in the too-tight confines of your "comfort zone," preventing anxiety's happy partner, excitement, from having its day. But sacred anxiety actually uses its energy to prompt a wider, deeper, hungrier inquiry into the meaning of your life. Examples of people who thrived on this type of anxiety include Buddha, Job, Emerson and the philosopher Kierkegaard, who wrote: "The more profoundly he is in anxiety, the greater is the man." Gerzon explores this idea transfixingly.

NATURE'S SISTER, INDOORS

Pod, at 313 Washington St., in Brookline Village, sells pure and natural household, bath and baby items. Call 617-739-3802.

Within the urban sweetness of Brookline Village sits this light green oasis, with its subtly piquant aroma. The store and its Zenishly arrayed items all seem to say "Breaaathe!" The selection starts with beautiful infant items—white kimono booties and a little scarf alongside lovely toy animals vegetable-dyed in interesting blues and greens. Di Santa Maria Novella brand soaps and dusting powders from Florence look and smell exotically Italian. Living Herbs baby soap, ultra mild, comes in a cloth bag clasped with a diaper pin. Potpourri, pungent yet not cloying, is on sale and also permeates Pod's air. The furniture equivalent of this re fined feeling comes in tightly packed, low Dos leather poufs in attractive pales ($340) filled amazingly, with polar fleece. Asymmetrical Japan ese dishes highlight—and demand—food's beauti ful presentation. The loftlike barn upstairs offer heavy Canadian wool blankets; puffy, fat knitte blankets and throws; and bumpy, white pebbl quilts. Red and green decorative Chinese lanterns some suitable for a candle, loll about invitingly And Pod carries Chilewich "plynyl" flooring whose greens and grays exude nature's aura.

REVIEW

OCEAN BOUNTY

Turner Fisheries wows with delicious chowder and sublime seafood

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

One of my colleagues, a well-traveled devotee of good food, is death on hotel restaurants. His absolutist opinion and ironclad rule against hotel dining are the result, no doubt, of too many late night dinners on tiring business trips, where dining in the hotel is a perfunctory refueling exercise dictated by convenience. He was skeptical when I told him he could dine at a different hotel restaurant in Boston every night of the week and not only escape having a bad meal, but dine at some of the best tables in the city. Turner Fisheries in the Westin Hotel at Copley Plaza is a case in point.

A multimillion dollar renovation has transformed Turner Fisheries into a handsome, hospitable venue, with upholstered banquettes and booths, large beige cylindrical lampshades on dark wooden lamps and square shades on chandeliers, two huge canvasses depicting sea life on two walls, and a striking blue and green leaded stained glass panel on a third. Dark woodwork everywhere gives the place a clubby atmosphere. Frette linens add a note of luxury.

Turner's gustatory delights begin with its bread—crusty standard French and slightly sourdough baguettes from Iggy's—and crisp flatbread crackers, all served with sweet butter. The menu offers almost a dozen appetizers in addition to shellfish from the raw bar, and more than a dozen main courses, providing ample choice in a manageable repertoire. In a city where soup in most upscale restaurants fetches double-digit prices, Turner's Hall of Fame clam chowder was an astounding value at $5. Not a cup, but a generous bowl of creamy, full-flavored broth and lots of chopped clams, Turner's chowder ranked with the best. Even better was the baby bouillabaisse ($9), a large bowl of tomato-infused broth, made pungent with garlic and onions and aromatic with saffron. The delicious broth was not the end of the story, for the bouillabaisse was chock full of firm, flavorful fish and shellfish, including salmon, monkfish, shrimp, sea scallops and mussels. The quality of the sea scallops stood out, for far from the tough, rubbery texture to which these delicate mollusks are often reduced in soups and stews, Turner's remained satiny and tender. A large crisp crostini lathered with pink aioli provided the crowning touch.

Turner's Grand Plat de Mer includes lobster, white gulf shrimp, oysters, Chatham topneck clams, Prince Edward Island mussels, Jonah crab claws and three dipping sauces.

A third appetizer, hand-diced yellowfin tuna with red beet carpaccio ($12), brought a small mountain of lean, sashimi-quality tuna, carved into small cubes and presented on an attractive teardrop-shaped white plate, with the beets moistened with a well-balanced sherry vinaigrette. Finally, among the starters, a Caesar salad boasted fresh, crisp Romaine lettuce. Dressed in a somewhat timid vinaigrette, it lacked the kick usually provided by anchovies and mustard. Still, topped with slices of pleasantly salty Grana Padano cheese and crisp focaccia croutons, the salad made a tasty and refreshing treat.

It would be difficult to choose the winner from among the main courses. Braised monkfish loin with roasted garlic risotto and carrot and mint salad ($26) demonstrated why monkfish—a notoriously ugly fish known as lotte to the French—has become so popular. Roasted to a firm, resilient texture, yet tender to the bite, its mildly garlicked flavor went well with the sweet, earthy carrots and lively dose of mint. Only the sticky, almost gummy texture of the risotto detracted from the dish. Seared yellowfin tuna with Romanesco cauliflower and truffled cauliflower emulsion ($28 constituted a reprise of the appetizer tun rare, moist, flavorful and melt-in-the mouth tender. The Romanesco caul flower, a light green cross between broc coli and cauliflower, was a satisfyin accompaniment.

The brioche- and herb-crusted co with Yukon gold potato and spinac ($25), a thick loin of good-textured, flak white fish, reminded me why cod really the king of fish. The spinach and potat accompaniment, enriched with swee creamy Parmesan cheese, made this a elegant dish. The least successful selec tion I tried was the sautéed wild salmo with porcini mushrooms, green apple an butternut squash broth ($25). While th fish had a pleasant flavor, its textur seemed flaccid, leading me to skepticis about its "wild" origins. Perhaps it ha recently escaped from a commercia salmon farm. The sauce, punctuated b large chunks of sweet-tart apple, made remarkably good foil for the mild fish.

Turner's desserts included a chocolat cake ($9), soft and mousselike, garnishe with red currant coulis and macadamia nu ce cream and served in a portion large and ch enough to be shared by two. Even bet- er was the cajeta dulce de leche ($8), a urnt caramel custard tart with roasted lums combined with a layer of dark hocolate on a crispy rice crust, garnished ith slightly sweetened whipped cream. It ouched all the key taste and texture bases o marvelous effect.

Turner's wine list includes a number of xcellent choices, particularly in the wer price ranges, providing a welcome ontrast to many of its Copley Square eighbors. Georges Duboeuf's 2001 Moulin à Vent, a classic Beaujolais, was uity but with good acid balance, making a splendid accompaniment to the fish. qually good was the 2002 Santa Maria alley pinot noir, a red grape variety that have long considered a good match with oultry and many fish, delivering a superb ouquet and a fine finish.

Turner Fisheries' staff is all class. On the rst evening I visited, they were not really sted, since the restaurant was sparsely opulated from the time we arrived until e left. On a second midweek evening, owever, all but a few tables were occupied upon our arrival. The hostess at first advised that our wait would be about 20 minutes, but upon spying my scarcely disguised grimace, she reconsulted her list and seating chart, did some juggling, and within two minutes we were seated at a comfortable booth. Waiters on both of my visits were knowledgeable, attentive and unfailingly friendly, but with a professional demeanor rather than the cloying chumminess with which friendliness is sometimes confused.

I may never persuade my colleague that his prejudice against hotel restaurants would be quickly dissipated if he sampled the likes of Turner Fisheries—or Meritage, Azure, Great Bay, Bambara, Rialto, Aujourd'hui or Clio, to name only the most prominent among Boston hotel restaurants. Sometimes preconceptions and ideology get in the way of savoring the full range of possibilities that life presents. Fortunately, the mindset of hotel restaurant detractors serves to benefit gastronomic opportunists like myself, making it possible to snare a table at a first-rate restaurant like Turner Fisheries on short or no notice. iB

DISH

100 Percent Chance of Rani Today

Todd does Disney…
Boston's newest buns…

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Bombay Bistro in Coolidge Corner recently reopened as Rani Bistro

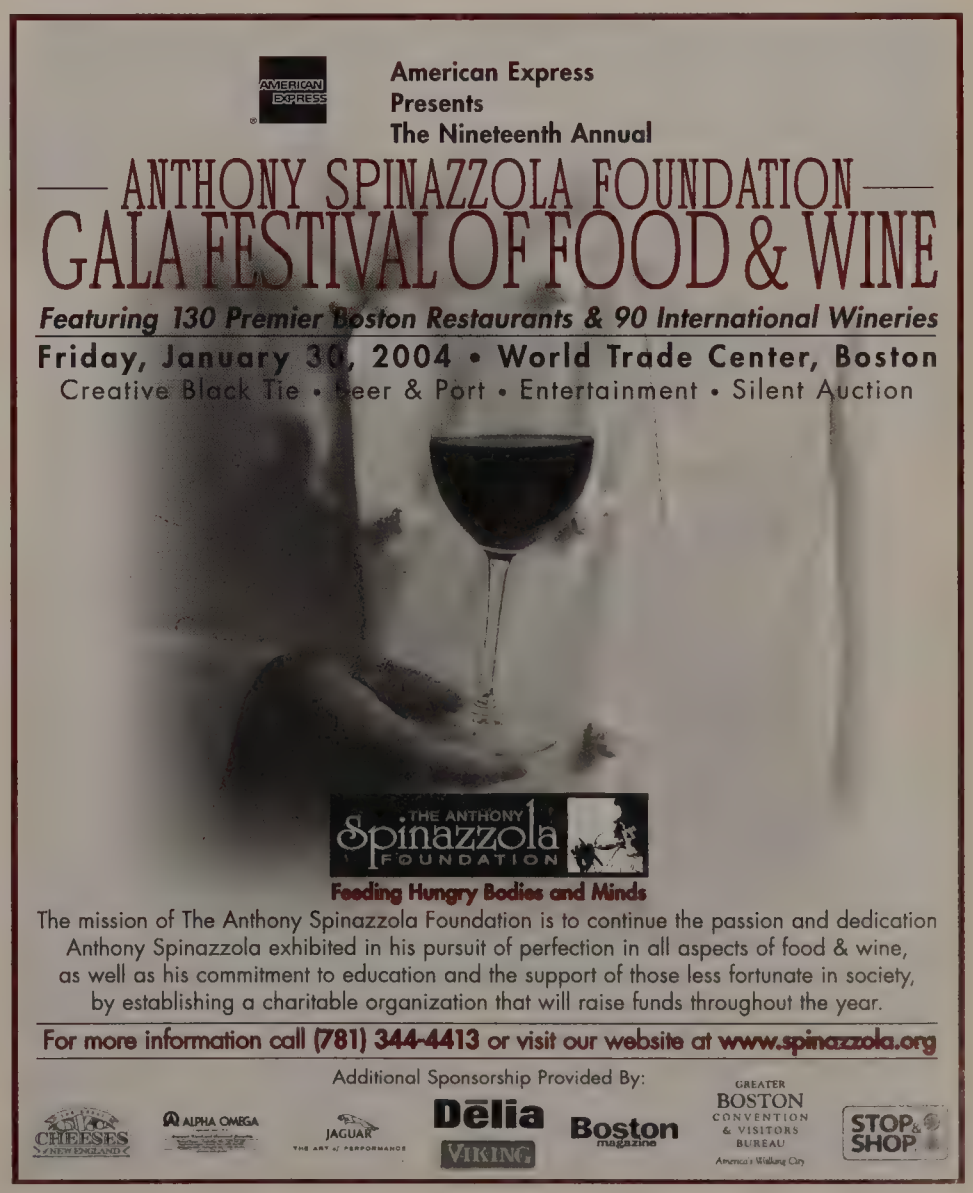
When is a closed restaurant not really a closed restaurant? When it reopens with a new name, new decor, new concept…and the same owners. Such is the case of Rani Bistro in Brookline. A few months ago, owners Samir and Prakruti Majmudar closed Bombay Bistro, leading devotees of the Coolidge Corner restaurant to assume the worst: that they would be deprived of dependably delicious Indian food.

Fear not, fretful fans! Rani Bistro has opened its doors to a bigger, brighter, much better-looking dining room, with a new focus on the cuisine of India's Hyderabad region. Rich, aromatic and complex, Hyderabadi-style specialties include such dishes as chicken with green mangoes; a very hot green pepper curry; and both Hussaieny lamb and tengai gadam (add your punchline here). Also available are vegetarian and tandoori items and, of course, those wonderful Indian breads. Best of all, every entree is priced at around $12.

SECOND COURSE

Bad news/good news: It's against the rules at Disney World to bring your own food into the park. However, if your winter plans include a vacation trip to Orlando, there's a new alternative to mystery mouse meat. Boston's very own Todd English is opening Todd English's Bluezoo, with a restaurant with more than 300 seats, at the park's Dolphin Hotel. According to English's Web site, the menu features "coastal cuisine with both international and New American culinary influences." Dishes range from the simple, such as grilled Florida red snapper, to more English-accented fare such as Bluezoo surf and turf, which combines a skirt steak with sausage-stuffed shrimp. Among the sundae selections on the dessert menu are Nutty Nutcase, Fruit Loop and Hoity Toity.

Some people question the wisdom of English opening so many restaurants in so many places, but it's certainly a smarter business move than Disney's new ride, Mission: Space Thrill. At a reported $100 million, the most expensive theme park ride ever built is racking up incredible maintenance costs, which are only slightly offset by providing each rider with an air sickness bag. Ugh.



Back in Boston, the Olives Group has promoted Clay Conley, formerly chef de cuisine at Olives Tokyo, to the position of culinary director. It's an irresistibly pretentious-sounding title ("Lights! Camera! Slice 'n' dice!"), but do we really want to second-guess a company whose personnel manager bears the godlike title "director of human potential"? Sure we do.

Buns awaaaaaay! Brunch can be a real dilemma. Buffets are expensive and tempt people to overeat. A la carte brunches can add up, too, once you order fresh-squeezed orange juice or even coffee with your omelette. So, without wincing as you reach for your wallet, and without resorting to a pitiful McBreakfast, what can you do? You can go to Aquitaine Bar à Vin Bistrot in the South End for a complete brunch on Saturday between 10 am and 3 pm for just $9.95. This is a big deal not just for the warm, house-made iced cinnamon buns, but for the choice of three egg items, all served with home fries, toast, orange or grapefruit juice, and Illy coffee. Best buns in the South End? We report. You decide. iB

WINE

Acidity's the Thing

BY SANDY BLOCK MW

This may not make sense to everyone, but if there's one general all-purpose bit of advice I dispense freely to people who ask me for the key to pairing wine and food—other than just drink what you like and forget about it, which is clearly the cardinal rule—it's that wines with strong acidity levels are the most adaptable to the widest variety of dishes. Acidity? Sounds revolting. But take it from me, if you forget everything else, it's not a bad rule of thumb: A wine that tastes sharp and even searing will often support food flavors beautifully. This is especially important in a restaurant setting where you're the lucky one appointed to order the wine and every diner's chosen something different. The wine with the noticeable bite is the one that will stand the best chance of making everyone happy.

What if you can't abide acidic flavors? Drink something mellower by all means. But how many people who squeeze lemon juice on their seafood eat lemons? How many who enjoy vinaigrette on their salad would choose to eat the dressing by itself? And if you put mustard on your hot dog, does that mean you enjoy the taste of mustard without accompaniment? The point is that flavors affect one another, often dramatically. They're not experienced in isolation. So even if you'd find an acidic tasting wine too harshly flavored to sip it by itself as a cocktail, recognize that its flavors change once you introduce food into the equation. And the way it generally works is that, unless you're serving an ultra hot spicy dish, wines with sharp acids taste softer with food, even food that's itself acidic (like, for example, ceviche).

Don't take my word for it; check it out yourself. Buy a low-acid wine, like a pinot grigio, and a strongly acidic one, like a sauvignon blanc (from Sancerre or New Zealand). Taste them side by side. Most people, other than confirmed acid freaks like myself, will find the milder pinot grigio more pleasant. Now, get some prosciutto and try a slice with each. One may still be pleasant, but the other's electrifying. Prepare a plate of greens and do the same test. Odds are you'll like the acidic wine better.

How do we know which wines are likely to feature prominent acidity? It depends on which grape varieties produce the wine and where they're grown. Cold-climate vineyards create the zestiest tasting wines with the crispest acids. Champagne is a perfect example. It's produced in a region too cold to make palatable table wine. Not only are its flavors sharp, but the bubbles reinforce the impression of tartness. We don't normally think of Champagne with food, especially this time of year when its association with celebration is so strong. But it can actually be a great dinner wine. So what's classic with Champagne? Subtle or bland food (the Champagne accents and enlivens it), salty-flavored foods (think caviar, oysters, smoked fish) and most especially dishes that have sharp or acidic accents themselves, because the wine tends to neutralize them. This is particularly so with Champagnes that are chardonnay-based and therefore invariably the lightest and most delicate of the species.

Other great examples of wines either grown in cool climates or originating from the right variety to make them characteristically acidic are Chablis; white Burgundy in general; German riesling (particularly hailing from the Mosel-Saar-Ruwer); Alsace, Australian or New Zealand Riesling; sauvignon blancs of most origins; Loire Valley wines (white or red); pinot noirs (ranging from Burgundy to Oregon to the cool central coast of California); New England wines; most Italian red wines (especially sangiovese or barbera-based reds, but also such modest wines as Montepulciano d'Abruzzo); and trebbiano-based whites (like Orvieto and Frascati). Probably the strongest example of success in the market today in this rather diverse category is New Zealand sauvignon blanc. Now in vogue, these wines not long ago occasioned derisive sneers because of their sour taste. But with any of these wine styles, the prominent acidity is a characteristic that needs to be preserved because winemaking and grapegrowing techniques can easily obliterate it. The less oak that's used in the fermentation and aging, the sharper the wine's flavors will be. The colder the fermentation is, the more the natural acids will be preserved. The good news is that these prominently acidic wines are generally more moderately priced.

What's the opposite of an edgy, acidic wine with food? Probably the least adaptable wines are those with high levels of alcohol. These wines require richer dishes or they'll overwhelm the food. They clash with spicy flavors, the excess alcohol combining to set off an explosive reaction on your palate. In addition to accentuating the heat, strongly alcoholic wines also tend to make bitter, earthy and salty flavored dishes taste stronger, often unpleasantly so. So ironically, while your best food bet may be a lighter wine whose acidity you notice, your worst is most likely going to be one that's robust, rich and impressively potent when tasted on its own. THU/JAN. 8-SUN./FEB. 8

Movies: IMAXed Out

Who knew that Boston boasts the largest consumer library of large-format films? Between three theaters—Museum of Science's Mugar Omni Theater, the New England Aquarium's Simons IMAX and the Comcast IMAX Theater at Jordan's Furniture—Greater Boston owns 30 titles. But you'll find only half of them playing at any one time. The good news is that from Jan. 8-Feb. 8, some of our personal faves will be shown as part of the first annual IMAX Fest. Among them: Everest, Ghosts of the Abyss, Into the Deep, Bugs! and To the Limit. The only problem is deciding which theater to go to. Here are a few stats to help you decide: The MOS's Omni Theater has New England's only 180-degree IMAX dome; Jordan's offers 3D technology and shaking seats; and the Aquarium has the region's largest screen, seven stories tall. Sample a film at each. www.imaxfest.com.

Performing Arts: Clowning Around

Is it possible that the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus has become passé? Too, you know, obvious? 'Cause it seems that the latest trend for circus troupes is to do away with the elephants and tigers and, instead, cue the fog machine and ethereal music. Cast in a new (and much dimmer) light, the circus has become less of a circus and more like performance art. That's the case with Cirque Éloize, which bills itself as "theater with acrobatic performances, poetry and circus thrills." Instead of jugglers, clowns and acrobats, you've got "artists" who dance, sing, juggle and tumble. You've got to hand it to these French Canadians: They put on a mighty impressive show. Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont St., Boston (617-931-2787). Tue.–Fri., 7:30 pm; Sat., 3 and 7:30 pm; Sun., 1 and 6 pm. Jan. 20–25. $25–$57.

FRI./JAN. 9–SUN./JAN.11

CityScope: Kinky Kraziness

One of our favorite winter activities is to head to the Park Plaza Hotel to see the looks of horror on guests' faces when the lobby fills up with barely dressed youngsters in leather getups and gimp masks. The Fetish Fair Fleamarket, sponsored by the New England Leather Alliance, is worth attending for this reason alone. But those interested in more than an ironic chuckle can browse artworks, meet porn stars, attend a demonstration or a lecture, and talk to activists. And, of course, there's the shopping. The hotel's ballrooms are filled with vendors selling outré accoutrements like leather corsets, wood paddles, floggers (the industry term for whips) and yes, even dungeon furniture. On Friday evening, there's an activists round table with a discussion on S&M issues and a slide show by photographer Barbara Nitke. The vendors start selling Saturday morning. $10. 18+. www.nla-newengland.org.

SAT./JAN. 17

Tastings: Extremely Fun Beer Fest

You might not expect Jim Koch, founder of Samuel Adams, to be such a friendly, down-to-earth guy. We've run into him at Souper Salad (yes, he gets his own lunch!) and on the street, and he's as normal as can be. You'd never guess he's the head of a $200 million company. And lest his quirky mannerisms lead you to think that he downed a few lagers before stepping out, think again. That's just his inimitable style. You too can make the acquaintance of this personable guy at the Extreme Beer Fest at the Boston Center fo the Arts, Jan. 17. If you're a beer lover, this is a not-to-be-missed event. Partake in a room full of unusual beers and listen to talks by Koch, Sam Calagione of Dogfish Head and Todd Charbonneau of Harpoon Brewery. Redbones provides grilled meats, and Formaggio Kitchen offers cheese tastings. Boston Center for the Arts, 539 Tremont St., Boston. www.beeradvocate.com. 1-5 pm or 6-10 pm. $25, $30 at the door (price includes 10 four-ounce samples).

THU./JAN. 8 AND SAT./JAN. 10

Music: A Hunka Hunka Birthday Love

The King would be a creaky 69 years old Jan. 8, and were he alive, he would no doubt be hosting one helluva throwdown. Even though Elvis is long gone, celebrations of his birthday continue throughout the city. Faneuil Hall's Boston Rocks features Las Vegas–based Elvis impersonator Steve Connolly, and guests can watch him swivel and sneer while they indulge in a buffet and birthday cake. Of course, Dick's Last Resort is throwing its (free) annual Elvis karaoke contest (with a King-size $500 cash prize), complete with an Elvis shrine and a jelly doughnut–eating contest. Then, on Jan. 10, Berklee Performance Center presents Love Him Tender: Spirit of the King, with Steve Connolly as Elvis ($23-$26). Boston Rocks, 245 Quincy Market, Boston (617-726-1110). Dick's Last Resort, 55 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-267-8080). Berklee Performance Center, 136 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-747-2261).

The Aileen Wuornos biopic is a Monster mush

BY PAUL SHERMAN

The outstanding 1992 documentary Aileen Wuornos: The Selling of a Serial Killer asked whether someone who's confessed to seven murders is still entitled to a fair trial. Monster, the new dramatic movie starring Charlize Theron as the Florida hooker who shot seven johns and was executed in 2002, raises another issue: whether someone who's committed seven murders is entitled to a sympathetic portrayal.

The answer is, of course, yes—but only if the movie is able to pull off such a feat. Writer-director Patty Jenkins' Monster is too much of a one-note tale to do so, though, with Wuornos as a kicked-around victim who, hurt and confused, starts to reap revenge on the (male) world that's treated her like dirt for so long. That's the only side of desperate, love-starved Wuornos we see, which leaves us starved for more insight into this woman.

Charlize Theron plays serial killer Aileen Wuornos in Monster.

The plot takes two intertwining paths. One involves Wuornos meeting teen lesbian Selby (Christina Ricci) and deciding to give women a try. The other follows Wuornos' killing spree: She shoots and kills a john in self-defense after he savagely beats her, and then she continues to kill other johns who don't beat her. Meeting Selby and killing in self-defense are coincidental events. But as the movie tells it, Wuornos' reasons for killing the other men are as much about getting money and cars that she and unwitting Selby can use as they are about quenching her deep-seated rage.

The depiction of the love and hate within Wuornos doesn't quite come off. Newcomer Jenkins' script and direction capture the first flush of lust and infatuation between the women convincingly enough, but it's increasingly hard to feel for a love that's doomed because one of the lovers is a multiple murderer. But that's the tack that Monster takes, and "if only it weren't for those pesky murders" is not the foundation for great tragedy.

Monster wants us to think "if only this woman hadn't been so emotionally abused," and you do think that, but only to a certain extent. This is one of those crime dramas that seeks to show the humanity in its killer and asks us to sympathize with her on an everyday level. That becomes especially obvious when Scott Wilson, one of the stars of In Cold Blood—the most human, dramatic and mournful movie about killers—turns up as one of Wuornos' victims. But while you can practically see the chip on Wuornos' broad shoulders—Theron gained 25 pounds for the role—she's often just too plain dumb to feel for. For instance, when she tries to "go straight and get a real job" by applying at a law firm instead of someplace more attainable, or when she drives around for days afterward in the cars of the men she murdered, you hardly wonder why people treat her as if she's stupid. She is.

Intelligence is hardly a requirement for a movie heroine, especially an antiheroine. But seeing a stupid person do stupid things is not very dramatic, and attempts to portray Wuornos as more self-aware don't work. The ineffective voice-overs seem tacked on and fail to broaden her into a more well-rounded character. Her history as a victim of childhood sexual abuse comes across only in one unremarkable dialogue scene, and for all the weight Theron packed on and makeup she wore to look like the less attractive Wuornos (and for all her dreaded Oscar buzz because of that), Theron's performance doesn't provide that intangible spark that could have drawn us into the character and the movie. And don't expect any clarity from the unclear symbolism and irony of the title, which comes from the nickname Wuornos gave a Ferris wheel she was scared to ride on as a kid.

As it progresses, Monster plays like a descent into madness, though the movie never really addresses Wuornos' instability, perhaps because that would make her seem less like "one of us" driven to violence. The movie's silence on that topic gives it an odd feeling.

Nick Broomfield, the director of Aileen Wuornos: The Selling of a Serial Killer, revisited Wuornos for his documentary Aileen: Life and Death of a Serial Killer, which has yet to play locally and which reportedly shows an increasingly delusional Wuornos before her execution. Maybe that film succeeds in capturing Wuornos where Monster fails. iB

Monster ★★

Written and directed by Patty Jenkins. With Charlize Theron, Christina Ricci and Bruce Dern. Rated R. Newmarket Films.

New Releases

The Backyard ★★½
This documentary about backyard wrestling will t an eye-opener to those unfamiliar with the trend teens starting their own hardcore wrestling leagu and beating the bejesus out of each other wi garbage cans, sheets of plywood and, of cours folding metal chairs. Director Paul Hough goes Nevada, Arizona, New York and even England talk to these kids who powerbomb each other oblivion. Hough keeps things moving along ar he makes no judgments, which is a definite im provement from the outrage with which the mai stream media have treated backyard wrestling. (A Coolidge Corner.)

Big Fish ★★★
Forget about the present-day drama between a blu tery dying Southerner (Albert Finney) and his sem estranged grown son (Billy Crudup) in Tim Burton latest. The real action is in the tall tales about th dying man's earlier life. These sequences featurin Ewan McGregor are the first thing anyone will r member from this movie. Burton gives them an ey popping heightened reality, while McGregor's live performance might remind you of another opt mistic dreamer from a Burton movie—Johnn Depp's Ed Wood. With his performance as a swa gering, Camelot-era man-about-town in Down Wi Love and now this role, McGregor has improbab shown himself to be a crackerjack portrayer American gumption. The rest of the movie falter but McGregor's scenes are bull's-eyes. (At Bosto Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Calendar Girls ★★
It's depressing that much of English moviemaking h become a minstrel show of stiff upper lips and pluck underdogs. In this comedy, a chapter of the twe Women's Institute publishes a popular nearly nud calendar. But the true story that the film is based o gets shoehorned into the Full Monty formula of tr umphant everyday heroes. Although any movie wit Helen Mirren and Julie Walters as its stars deserv some respect, this is too cute and too flimsy. (A Boston Common, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Cold Mountain ★★½
With its female bonding, its romance set against backdrop of war, and its overgroomed star, Anthon Minghella's adaptation of Charles Frazier's novel one part Fried Green Tomatoes, one part Last of th Mohicans and one part infomercial for whatever lin of cosmetics Nicole Kidman is wearing. By defaul this is the best of the season's big dramatic epic clearly besting The Last Samurai and House of San and Fog, and much of it works: the budding romanc of Kidman's and Jude Law's characters interrupted b the Civil War, the strife that besets all the characte because of the war, the supporting characters playe by the likes of Philip Seymour Hoffman, Natali Portman, Ray Winstone and Jack White of th White Stripes. But while Kidman's minister daughter has her civilized life collapse around he and gets pushed to the brink of starvation an poverty, before being aided by Renee Zellweger Ma Kettle– meets–Peppermint Patty farmgirl, th actress always looks as if she's made up to go shop ping. It's hard to feel her plight in your gut becaus of it. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Company ★

The Cooler ★★
As he often has, William H. Macy plays a guy gettin the fuzzy end of life's stick in this Vegas comedy drama. He's a sad sack whose luck is so bad that hi job is merely to turn up at the casino where he work and cool down gamblers' hot streaks. He's about t quit and, presumably, try to change his luck in life especially now that he's started a relationship with round-the-block casino waitress (Maria Bello). Tha might have been an interesting tale had writer-direc tor Wayne Kramer stuck to it. Instead, the stor brings in too many outside forces—including the re turn of the cooler's estranged son (Shawn Hatosy) and the pressures the casino manager (Alec Baldwin) is feeling to "modernize"—that clutter the plot. The interesting hero at the center just gets smothered by it all. (At Copley Place and Harvard Square.)

Girl with a Pearl Earring ★★

Based on Tracy Chevalier's novel, this film gives a speculative background story to Johannes Vermeer's 1660s painting. As director Peter Webber strives to get the Dutch master's lighting and composition just right, his poor characters walk around in a stiff, humorless daze, and the story turns stilted in no time. Colin Firth's Vermeer is a garden-variety tortured artist, in this case tormented by the bourgeois wife (Essie Davis) and mother-in-law (Judy Parfitt) pushing him to paint more and earn more. His household's new maid (Scarlett Johansson) puts no such demands on him, and the pair start a secret friendship that leads to her posing for the famous portrait. Although the relationships between the sexes and between the classes can be interesting here, the central pair's sexual tension is so laden with pregnant pauses and symbolism (like Vermeer's penetrating piercing of the maid's ears) that this overripe art house melodrama is almost instant self-parody. (At Kendall Square.)

The House of Sand and Fog ★★

Local author Andre Dubus III's father wrote the story on which In the Bedroom was based. Now the younger Dubus has had a novel adapted, and you could call this similar film In the Three-Bedroom. Like the previous movie, it compounds tragedy upon tragedy. The first is when emotional wreck Kathy (Jennifer Connelly) loses her house when it is mistakenly seized for nonpayment of taxes. Before she can correct the mistake, the house goes up for auction and is grabbed by a down-and-out former Iranian colonel (Ben Kingsley) who wants to sell it to maintain his family's standard of living. The struggle between these two people dependent on the house is inevitably headed for more tragedy, but the plot takes a convoluted and not very involving path to get there, and is too dependent on an imprudent sheriff's deputy (Ron Eldard) who tries to help Kathy but repeatedly messes things up. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Japanese Story ★★

Nothing like a near-death experience to break the romantic ice. At least that's what this Australian romance would have you believe. The geologist (Toni Collette) and the married Japanese businessman (Gotaro Tsunashima) she's assigned to escort to remote mineral mines can't stand each other initially. Then they almost die when their rental car gets stuck in the desert, and once they get it moving it's not long before they're having a fling. The Brief Encounter–like story then goes for an emotional home run that it just can't pull off, because the depth of the relationship never quite convinces. (At Copley Place.)

The Last Samurai ★★

Dances with Wolves goes east in this 1870s tale of a cavalry officer (Tom Cruise) who's sent to Japan to help train the emperor's troops to fight off a rebellion by samurai opposed to Japan's modernization. When the officer, who's been disillusioned ever since witnessing Custer's brutal campaign against Native Americans, is taken prisoner by the samurai and carted back to their mountain camp, he sees that, like the Indians back home, they're not the savages the government claims they are. Director Ed Zwick (Glory, Courage Under Fire) again exhibits the social conscience that is his trademark, but his message is compromised by his casting of Cruise. Although the movie salutes community and unselfishness, it also expends most of its energy glorifying its star. Ultimately, it's as hypocritical as someone who says "Do what I say, not what I do." (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King ★★

Peter Jackson has once again given us an expansive spoof of bombastic, medieval fantasy adventures: the furrowed brows, the swords and sorcery, the creatures, the hair extensions. Oh, that's right, it's not supposed to be silly. Jackson is obviously an imaginative, capable director, but after three movies and seven hours, I still don't care a lick about anything that happens to any of these solemn, solemn people. The LOTR trilogy epitomizes the sort of movie that wins technical Academy Awards but that no one takes seriously. Yet for reasons I just can't understand, a lot of folks have taken these films seriously. (Come on, isn't Tolkien's attractive-human-heroes-versus-ugly-Orc-villains plot just a tad juvenile?). Maybe Jackson can go back to making interesting movies like Heavenly Creatures and Forgotten Silver now. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lost in Translation ★★★½

Sofia Coppola dealt with shared pain in her 2000 directorial debut, The Virgin Suicides, and she conjures up a similar funny-sad tone in her tale of two Americans (Bill Murray, Scarlett Johansson) adrift in Tokyo. He's a washed-up movie star making a bundle endorsing Japanese booze; she's the wife of a work-consumed photographer (Giovanni Ribisi). They're staying at the same hotel and killing time at the same hotel bar, and their misery loves company. The characters make a great movie couple, although their relationship is platonic (with its share of sexual tension). Murray gives a Buster Keaton–like, sad-clown performance built mainly around physical and especially facial reactions to absurd situations, and Johansson is a little heartbreaker. (At Copley Place, Harvard Square, Coolidge Corner and suburbs.)

Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World ★★★

An intense, eye-popping opening battle and director Peter Weir's realistic storytelling help this naval epic sail over dull patches, gabby interludes and ho-hum subplots. The level of authenticity is so much higher than any mere piece of spectacle in this 1805 story of the crew of an English ship that is attacked by a French ship and then spends the rest of the movie tracking it to get revenge. Russell Crowe plays the battle-wise captain and Paul Bettany is the ship's inquisitive scientist, and though these friends' dialogues about the merits of science can't compare with the action sequences, Crowe especially breathes great life into his character. For once, the special effects serve the story in a big movie, and not the other way around. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Paycheck ★★

It would have been great to have a fun action-thriller nestled between this season's literary-minded Oscar seekers and the kids' stuff. Too bad this ain't it. Like Minority Report, John Woo's adaptation of a Philip K. Dick short story is a Hitchcock-like accused-man-on-the-run story turned futuristic. This time it's Ben Affleck as an engineer who's had three years of his memory erased after working on a secret project, but who left himself an envelope of seemingly everyday items that he knew he could use to get himself out of his predicament. That's a cool premise, but it gets so convoluted that its credibility soon plummets. (How did he just happen to have that fortune-cookie fortune with the important message and important number preprinted on it?) (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Peter Pan ★★

Unless you're 10 years old, there's not much chance you'll be overly enchanted by the latest film version of J.M. Barrie's tale of Victorian lass Wendy (Rachel Hurd-Wood), flying Peter (Jeremy Sumpter), Captain Hook (Jason Isaacs) and the Lost Boys. This one is heavy on visual effects and crafting, and it breaks tradition by actually casting a boy as Peter, so the puppy love between him and Wendy is less pretend than usual. But you keep waiting for something distinctive to spill from this version directed by P.J. Hogan (Muriel's Wedding, My Best Friend's Wedding), and it never quite does. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Shattered Glass ★★★

The story of Stephen Glass, the hotshot New Republic reporter who turned out to have faked most of his articles, becomes a fascinating drama that avoids the usual stodginess of docudramas. Instead of showing us the hows and whys of Glass' fakery—does anyone really know that besides Glass himself?—the movie presents Glass (Hayden Christensen) as an eager-to-please go-getter who appears taken in by his own veneer of guilelessness (and who also appears to be the best co-worker anyone could have). That self-deception may be the biggest and most interesting deceit in the movie, which also touches upon entertainment's dangerous, seductive power over journalism. The strong supporting cast includes Peter Saarsgard, Chloe Sevigny, Hank Azaria and Melanie Lynskey. (At Kendall Square and Copley Place.)

Stuck on You ★★★

Anyone who branded the Farrelly Brothers "gross-out kings" without seeing the sweetness in their comedies (There's Something About Mary, Kingpin) might finally get the point this time. Their endearing story of two conjoined twins (Matt Damon, Greg Kinnear) who move from Martha's Vineyard to Hollywood so one can pursue an acting career is amusing and good-natured, with winning performances from its two leads and, as variations of themselves, Cher and Meryl Streep. The visual gimmick of having conjoined twins works much better than the problematic gimmickry of the brothers' Shallow Hal, though their penchant for casting their New England buddies in supporting parts might make you wonder why half of Hollywood has a Boston accent. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Turns of Fate

After drawing Phil Spector out of retirement to produce its second album, Starsailor ends up charting its own course

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Phil Spector might never have been a suspect in the fatal shooting of a club hostess at his Los Angeles home early last year if it wasn't for the British band Starsailor. The legendary producer might have already choked to death at that same mansion, the victim of a ham sandwich.

"Our drummer had to give him the Heimlich maneuver," says singer-guitarist James Walsh, whose band shared that fateful 2002 lunch on an invitation from Spector's daughter, a Starsailor fan who had seen the band perform the night before. When the producer for the Ronettes and John Lennon began choking on his food, drummer Ben Byrne sprang into action. "We saved his life," Walsh says.

Only two tracks produced by Phil Spector made the final cut on Starsailor's new album.

The relationship didn't end there. "We went for lunch and thought that would be the end of it," Walsh says. "While we were up there, he basically told us he was producing our [next] record, and it was difficult to say no really."

So Spector showed up a few months later at England's Abbey Road studios, where he had remixed the Beatles' Let It Be, and began producing Starsailor's new disc, Silence Is Easy.

It wasn't easy working with Spector, who had retired from producing after the Ramones' 1980 album End of the Century (he allegedly pulled a gun on Dee Dee Ramone during the recording sessions). According to the band, he was pleasant enough, and didn't pull any guns, but seemed distracted from the proceedings.

"We wanted to give him the benefit of the doubt and say, It might seem like a mad idea now, but maybe in a few weeks' time, it will all start to come together," says Walsh, whose band plays the Paradise Jan. 20. "We persevered with Phil Spector a lot longer than we would have with anyone else, because he's the guy who produced 'Imagine' and is capable of genius. But it just got to a stage where we weren't sure that he knew where he was going, or what he wanted to do with the songs. He was letting things go, like really badly out-of-tune guitars."

"It was all about tape echo—I don't remember anything else he used really," the 23-year-old singer says from a tour stop in Germany. "He was quite hands-on with the arrangements, which we found uncomfortable and daunting, because we wanted to live and die by our own arrangements."

Starsailor dismissed Spector in October 2002, and the band kept only two of the songs he produced for Silence Is Easy—the title track and "White Dove." Not that one would be able to pick them out on the CD (available as an import and due for American release Jan. 27), as other songs the band co-produced with Danton Supple have a richness from strings that some might mistake for Spector's famous "wall of sound."

"He was one of the most legendary producers ever, but we still kept faith in our own instincts," Walsh says. "Phil Spector definitely had an influence on the album, even on the tracks he didn't [produce]. He instilled a confidence in us by coming out of retirement after 20 years or whatever and choosing Starsailor to work with. He gave us confidence in our own abilities."

Starsailor began its own fateful path at a music college where Walsh met drummer Byrne and bassist James Stelfox. Another singer had called in sick for a concert, and Walsh stepped in. "If he hadn't been ill, the rest of the band might not have heard me," he says, "and I might not have heard them."

"Our friendship sort of happened quite quickly, 'cause we shared the same musical influences," Walsh says of the band, rounded out with keyboardist Barry Westhead and named after an album by '60s folk-rocker Tim Buckley. "I remember swapping [Tim's son] Jeff Buckley's Grace and Nick Drake's Five Leaves Left albums with the bass player and saying, 'These are albums you should really listen to.'"

Now Starsailor, whose 2001 debut Love Is Here was a hit in England, stands to give Coldplay a run for its money with the bolder, romantic sweep of Silence Is Easy. The band has already guaranteed its own footnote in rock history.

"Watching the Imagine DVD and seeing Phil Spector in the room with John Lennon, it's incredible that we have a link to John Lennon and the Beatles," Walsh says. "There aren't a lot of bands that can say that really."

As for his band's shock at hearing about the February 2003 shooting of hostess and B-movie actress Lana Clarkson in the Spector mansion, the singer adds, "I know he's not an ordinary bloke, but I don't personally think he's capable of anything like that." iB

Searching for Bart

We met you two summers ago at the Cantab one hot night. We danced to Little Joe Cook and then both groups of friends went our separate ways. A few months later, my friend and I ran into you again at Harvard Gardens. You took a fancy to her...and she to you. The glitch? She was in a long-term relationship. Well, she's single now...and still talks about what a cool guy you were. The details we can remember about you: Bart, went to Skidmore, worked for the Fed, lived in the Copley/South End 'hood, wore a Campers/Fat Tire T-shirt (both times we saw you) and had a great sense of humor. She was blond, cute...and was wearing a camouflage shirt (both times we saw you). If you remember her and are interested in meeting up (drinks at the Cantab?), send an e-mail. Thanks from her matchmaking friends.

Frances

We met in the United Airlines first class lounge at LAX airport in August—on our way back to Boston. I was returning from a trip to Australia. You were returning from a visit with your sister in L.A. and were headed back to Boston to stay with your other sister in the Back Bay area. We talked a bit in LAX and talked some more after we landed in Boston. You were going through a transitional period in your life—but I gave you my phone number on a card from my favorite restaurant in Paris in the event that you needed a friend in Boston. You never called. I still think about you today and hope that we'll bump into each other in the Back Bay, in an airport, etc. Are you still in Boston? If not, I will gladly travel to South Africa to see you again. Please e-mail me if you see this message.

Irish Pat the Plow Guy

Thank you for saving our asses—literally. They were freezing off while my roommate and I, two twenty-something graduate students, fought to get our little Civic out of the middle of the road. Luckily you came along with your tractor and saved the day. I'm writing this before finally going to bed at 3 am. Without you we would have been there hours longer. Thank you, thank you, thank you! With love and admiration,

I love the Impersonals and I never thought I would need to write one, but I can't seem to get this girl out of my mind. She seems to be tattooed on my brain. On Friday, Dec. 5, I was at work at a major hotel in the Back Bay. As I walked through the lobby, I saw you greeting your fellow students for the party upstairs, which was for the school of communication at Boston University. I talked to you briefly about the party upstairs and you said I was welcome to go too. I had a white shirt, red tie and black pants. You were beautiful, your name started with an S (yes, I remember it) and you were a junior. Unfortunately, I had to go back to work and I never saw you again. I regret not asking you for your number or if you wanted to get a drink sometime. I would love to get the chance to get to know you better.

Rufus/Lucas? Peabody Snake Lover

I met you in the checkout line of PJ's Pets on Route 1 in Peabody about two months ago. You were buying stuff for your snake, and I was buying stuff for my turtles. We talked inside the store and you followed me out to the parking lot. You asked me out, and it pained me to say no, but at the time I was a taken girl. I'm single now and would love to take you up on your offer if it still stands!

Charlestown Girl

We met at the Teatro on Dec 10. You were sitting at the bar by the window, waiting for a table and for your friends to finish smoking outside. I was the guy in black overcoat, working on my martini and looking for a place to sit and order my dinner. We chatted for a while. You mentioned you worked for Brown Bros. Harriman and lived in Charlestown. Then your friends arrived, having finished their smoke, and your table reservation came through. We said goodbye and you left before I could ask your name. There was something about you that I can't forget and I don't want to spend the rest of my life in regret. It might be Improper to come looking for the No-Name girl at her offices, so I am trying this Impersonal route in the desperate hope that you or one of your friends might notice it somehow. If you do and want to take it further, drop me an e-mail—let's rendezvous at Teatro for an encore and check out the chemistry.

It was Monday (Dec 8.) on my way to wo If the train had not been so crowd would have said hello. I exited the train at Kenmore. You were there with two of your friends. I wanted to talk to you ea in the night but I never got the chance; you had some other guy o your ear all night. ANUARY 7 – 20, 2004

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

CAPRICORN DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

he situations you're already involved in don't change drastically in the New Year. However, hey're liable to intensify or impact on you more than they already have. Since your Saturn uler continues to travel through Cancer, your cosmic complement, long-term relationships n both your personal and business life could become more serious. You may have to ssume greater responsibility for significant others or back off entirely. Keep in mind that rosperous Jupiter in earthy Virgo keeps the funds flowing through the summer.

AQUARIUS

ANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

he biggest change, the one that'll affect how you react to lmost everything, is your unpredictable Uranus ruler's shift ut of Aquarius for good. Whatever lesson the Great Awakener aught you is now part and parcel of the persona you present. Vhat you're left with now, and for years to come, is artistic, dealistic Neptune in your sign. If you haven't already started, ry to explore whatever talents you do possess and check out he art forms that appeal to you. 2004 is the year you reach a igher level of spiritual awareness too.

PISCES

EBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

s it time for a total transformation—especially for Fish orn in February—or simply a change in appearance, ttitude or demeanor? This year, independent-minded, umanitarian Uranus remains in Pisces, even during its etrograde session, which runs June through November. leanwhile, your Neptune ruler continues inching its way rough Aquarius, introducing artistic folks into your social cene. Because benevolent Jupiter is in your marriage house, nese folks are also likely to be wealthy, witty and wise.

ARIES

ARCH 20–APRIL 19

he New Year begins and ends with a surge of passion, udacity and determination. There may be moments in ay when you doubt your progress, but they'll pass as on as your Mars ruler slips away from Saturn's straints. Family matters can seem more serious than ey really are—don't let them interfere with a hot mmer romance. Late September, when prosperous, rotective Jupiter gives the nod, is the time to launch a ew project—you haven't been in such a cosmically vored position for the last two years.

TAURUS

PRIL 20–MAY 20

ecause your affectionate Venus ruler goes retrograde in the gn of the Twins this spring, you could find yourself in an asperating dilemma, unable to make up your mind and ove on. Venus' extended trip through Gemini—from April rough July—can also have an impact on financial matters d other things of value. Be patient, use your imagination find a solution, and trust that luck will prevail in March, gust and November, when Venus and Jupiter, the bearers good fortune, fulfill your heart's desires.

GEMINI

AY 21–JUNE 20

2004 quick-witted Twins get to master the art of ctoring prudence and practicality into the decision-. aking process without compromising their ultimate vision. agine: more money, less guilt! Because your Mercury ruler osses the border between realistic earth signs and inspired e signs during its three retrograde sessions, you'll come t with high spirits and high ideals intact. April, August d December are the months to go on vacation, visit old ends or write the screenplay. June and July? The best time r making mad, passionate whoopee.

CANCER

is year Saturn stretches from six to 27 degrees of Cancer, olding impressionable young Crabs into shape along the y. The divine disciplinarian brings a sense of sponsibility and mature behavior no matter what your age, so prepare to grow into the person you were destined from birth to become. The trickiest time for the USA and George W. is June, when the planet of repression and retribution sits on their sun degree.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Try to do some skiing, skating or scuba diving during the first two months of 2004. Physical activity coupled with a change of climate will rejuvenate your body and spirit like nothing has in years. While partnership matters continue to be unclear, fanciful or difficult to nail down, they shouldn't throw you for a loop anymore, like a Uranian twist of fate. A clandestine fling in June might become more intense and last longer than either one of you figures; a meeting not only of sexual appetites, but of minds and creative talents as well.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

You remain the chief beneficiary of Jupiter's largesse through September, after which the jolly giant moves into your Libra money house for the next 13 months. Don't take opportunities to become wealthier and wiser for granted. Because unpredictable Uranus can upset Virgins born in August, while destructive Pluto nails those born in mid-September, knowing what to do and having the wherewithal to do it would be a very good thing. When your Mercury ruler turns retrograde in April, August and December, take a vacation, plan a reunion or go on retreat.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Your luck should improve dramatically once expansive Jupiter gets to Libra in time for your birthday. Thirteen months of protection, prosperity and enthusiasm follow, so plan to launch a pet project while the force of the Greater Fortuna is with you. A romance or a close friendship may go south while your Venus ruler is retrograde in the sign of the Twins this spring; give yourself lots of time—say, until August—for things to settle before making your choice. Saturn in your career midheaven suggests that you're going to be president of something some day soon.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

In 2004 you won't feel you're slogging through a swamp because your Mars co-ruler doesn't go retrograde. Instead, the Red Planet takes swift, sure steps around the zodiac from hot, horny Aries to sociable Sagittarius. In the course of the year you'll get to sample the best or the worst qualities nine signs have to offer before you move on. Compare that with the six months you've just spent treading water in soulful Pisces, sacrificing self-preservation in an often futile attempt to be compassionate. Change, the fixed Scorpio will find, is good.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

If the odds are favorable, take the chance and the ultimate payoff. As long as Jupiter is in your career midheaven, you'll continue to expand your influence, spread your good name and enjoy your ruling planet's protection, even while it's retrograde from Jan. 4 until May 4. You'll have a risky adventure when fiery Mars is in impulsive Aries this winter, and a joyful Leo experience when it explores new terrain in July. Venus in your Gemini partnership house for months on end can make this spring an especially social and marriage-minded season.

THE BUSTONIAN

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the Pops, top: Gen Tracy and David Jacobs. Middle row: Andrea Masano and Richard DeAgazio; Doris Yaffe and Benson Willis. Bottom row: Bob Crowe; Paul Verrochi and George Albrecht.

WHERE'S TINY TIM WHEN YOU NEED HIM?

Boston's corporate bigwigs proved they're no Scrooges with A Company Christmas at Pops—a gala concert benefiting an outreach program that allows 60,000 grade-school kids to attend concerts throughout the year.

Symphony Hall was fully decked, with poinsettias, wreaths, bell ringers and carolers, and even the statue of BSO founder Henry Lee Higginson was festooned with a bow tie made of ribbon.

Present and accounted for: office supplies mogul Tom Stemberg (the evening's chairman); newspaper publishers Pat Purcell and David Jacobs; the latter's shiksa-goddess wife, Gen Tracy; attorney at large and Thurston Howell III doppelganger Bob Crowe; car czar George Albrecht; banking bigwig Chad Gifford; software gazillionaire and mega-philanthropist John Cullinane with the lovely Diddy (no known relation to P. Diddy); financial titan Richard DeAgazio; custom tailor to the stars Alan Rouleau; Morgan Stanley's blonde bombshell Karen Keaney; insurance behemoth William van Faasen; naturally carbonated publicist Doris Yaffe; sportswear designer Andrea Masano; and one (presumably Jewish) man who said, "Where's the deli platter? I feel like I'm with a bunch of Gentiles."

Following cocktails, hors d'oeuvres and a boxed supper, beloved maestro Keith Lockhart led the Pops in a medley of seasonal favorites that included an appearance by ruby-throated warbler Maureen McGovern (the '70s icon responsible for such hits as "The Morning After," from The Poseidon Adventure, and "Love Theme from Superman"). However, the evening's showstopper turned out to be Mitt Romney, who took the stage to read "'Twas the Night Before Christmas," responding to the crowd's enthusiastic applause with the aw-shucks comment, "I do this all the time."

All the Who's from Who's Who-ville seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly, and only the Grinch could have left not bubbling over with holiday cheer.

A BLUE-BLOODED CHRISTMAS...

The Old Guard was waltzing around the Christmas tree and fa-la-la-la-la-ing all over the place at the umpteenth annual Winter Ball, one of Boston's most enduring and endearing social traditions.

The multigenerational black-tie crowd nicely complemented the festive yet tastefully decked ballroom of the Park Plaza, and the band alternated between cheek-to-cheek numbers and newer stuff while everyone danced, drank and dallied with folks they don't get to see much of the rest of the year.

In fine fettle and looking fabulous were such socialites as Vicky Whitney (with her debutante-in-waiting daughter Tory); the spectacular Tita Hyland and her affable other half, Douglas; Chestnut Hill lovebirds Fred Church and Carolyn Graham with the latter's daughter, Christie; couture-clad glamazon Julie Sprague; the ultra-lovable Nicholas and Mary Kay Holder; gorgeous young thing Panda Ebling; investment hottie Dave Daglio and the stunning Allison Moran; lawyer-cum-folksinger Henry duLaurence; bohemian hipsters Lina Tilman and Anders Corr; Brooklinian by way of Britain Andrew McIlwraith and his Brahmin wife, Tish Robbins; the magnificent Rhys Gardiner; Boston's answer to Jimmy Stewart, Peter Creighton; twinkle-toed heiress Marigold Randall; and gala fixture Michael Halperson, squiring a recent import from Virginia, Vanessa McLaughlin. The women's dresses were more fashion forward than usual; in fact, several young ladies could have passed for one of the Hilton sisters, although not as badly behaved.

Meanwhile, there was the personal trainer who told people he was a taxidermist, a lawyer who introduced herself as a stunt double, one man who responded to the friend who asked where he'd been by saying, "Over there, with the North Sho contingent," and another (in his mid 30 who said, "What's with all these white bo with afros? Must be the new style."

Overheard elsewhere during the eveni from a woman who'd hosted a dinner par earlier that night: "I had to give everyone to-go cup, even though I only live tw blocks away. Anyone who's ever tasted m cooking will tell you that it requires cocktail." iB

At the Winter Ball, clockwise from top: Vicky and Tory Whitney, Panda Ebling and Mark Kay Holder; Peter Creighton and Gretchen Amidon; Richard Breed, Vicky Whitney and Parker Treacy; Cheryl Yung, Lina Tilman and Anders Corr; Allison Moran and Dave Daglio; Henry duLaurence; Corey Smaller and Katherine Noble; Vanessa McLaughlin and Michael Halperson

HIT SINGLES

If you're currently without significant other and looking to change that (or simply to improve your love life), our annual Bachelors & Bachelorettes issue may give you hope. The 20 single men and women we profile in this issue stand as proof that there are interesting, smart, talented and attractive men and women in Boston who are not married or in a serious relationship. (Even more heartening is the fact that we had a far greater number of worthy nominees than we could include in this issue.)

Among our bachelors this year, you'll find a Bermuda-born TV news reporter with impeccable manners and baking skills, the lacrosse- and bridge-playing leader of a local band, and the "politically hip," 20-something founder of a nonprofit with offices in three cities. Our bachelorettes include a Patriots cheerleader who's studying law at Harvard, a former police officer turned attorney who ice-climbs and plays the flute, and the press secretary to the state's highest elected official.

You can meet some of these men and women—and other singles—at an upcoming IMPROPER-hosted party celebrating the single life. Check www.improper.com for more info.

MORE GYM GRIPES

Please add these to the list of workout pet peeves ("Gym Etiquette," Jan. 7): People on their cell phones. We hear you all day on the street, subways and elevators. People who are actually working out don't want to hear your cell phone conversations while you're on the StairMaster. Sitting on a machine with no intention of moving is another one. And the final peeve: trainers who are only interested in training women or showing them the equipment, and when a guy (me) asks for assistance they act like I ruined their day.

ON THE WARPATH

I'd like to know why you call your magazine THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN if no one from your company has the first clue about Boston. Yuppies and college kids aren't Boston—maybe they're the Back Bay and Beacon Hill, but that's not the real Boston, never mind an improper one. It's too bad you can't focus more on the real people who make Boston great, the people from Eastie and what hasn't yet been yuppified in the North End and Southie. That would be a good magazine, but you messed it all up with your wannabe Bostonians—now that sounds like a good title for a magazine.

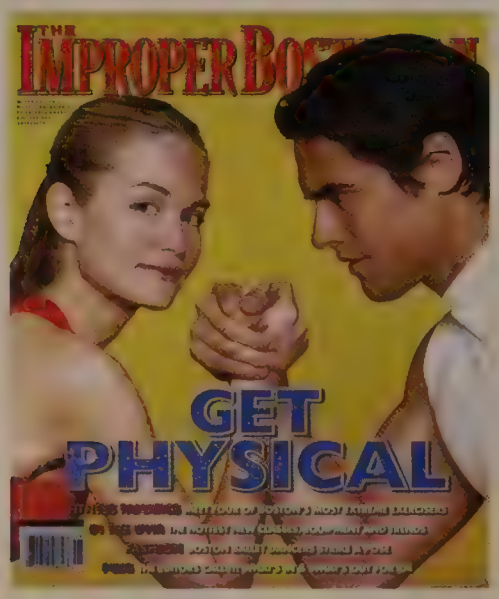
A BONE TO PICK

I adore THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and rely on every issue to give me an accurate update of city happenings and restaurant tips. It's an added plus to have available for my job as a concierge with the Lenox Hotel. However, after reading "What's In and Out for 2004" (Jan. 7), three of my four-legged friends and I decided we had to send you an e-mail.



We all beg to differ that pugs are out this year! Miss Rosie is my pug, Lucy belongs to Meredith White, rooms division manager, and the newest addition to the Lenox/Briar Group pug family (as of Christmas) is Hank, who belongs to Robert Fathman, Azure's executive chef. With their smiling faces, curly tails and adoring personalities, Miss Rosie, Lucy and Hank all feel that pugs will continue to be very "in" dogs in the year 2004.

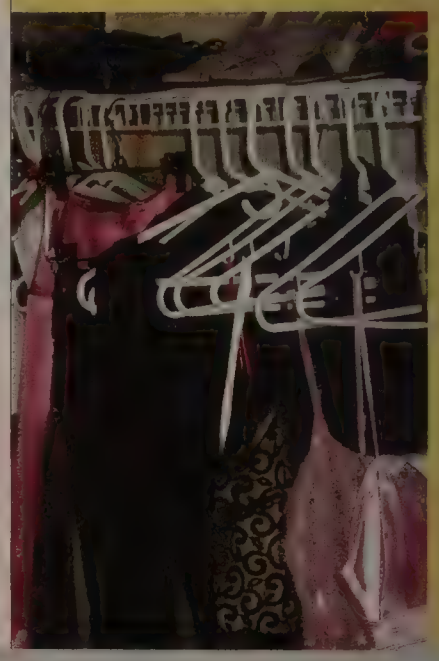
L-EGANT

If you can judge a restaurant by its opening party, then L, the new restaurant on the first floor of Louis Boston, is guaranteed to attract gorgeous, well-dressed A-listers and hipsters. On the other hand, if you judge a restaurant by its menu, the place will be filled with gourmands seeking out the cuisine of chef Pino Maffeo—whom Louis Boston owner Debi Greenberg dubs an "up-and-coming talent."



To be sure, L's opening party on Jan. 7 was a success—despite the 17-degree weather outside. Maybe the stars were aligned just right, but hordes of people garbed in Gucci and Prada kept filing through the doors—and no one seemed eager to leave. They were too busy admiring the new decor and scarfing up warm potato spring rolls with crème fraîche and Osestra caviar, and crab cakes in mini-martini glasses with avocado paste. Maffeo, a Boston native who most recently worked with New York phenom Patricia Yeo at AZ and Pazo, has developed a menu that has Southeast Asian and Japanese influences. Although we'll miss Cafe Louis' famed paper-thin gourmet pizzas, Maffeo's menu seems positively mouthwatering, with dishes like braised beef short ribs with taro puree and smoked truffle anglais, and slow-cooked salmon with lime risotto, crystallized ginger and herb crust. But with so many good-looking people to ogle—clad in such finery—will anyone even notice the food? 234 Berkeley St., Boston (617-266-4680). —Erin Hagedorn and Julie Suratt

CLOSET CASE

In a perfect world, closets would self-organize at the beginning of every year. Outdated trends, the shirt that looked good in the store (you bought it, then never wore it) and all vestiges of the '90s would get ejected. In reality, though, you've got to do it yourself, and unless you're unemployed or have an incredibly dull social life, chances are it's not happening. Enter Emily Neill of Closet Smarts. The self-proclaimed fashion maven has turned cleaning out the closet into a full-time job. First, Neill asks you to fill out a questionnaire that gives her an idea of your personal style, body type and budget. From there, she weeds out the unwanted, unwearable and just plain ugly and determines what you have and what you need. Next it's time to shop. Whether it's the Garment District or Neiman Marcus, Neill—who's spent years working in a local boutique—holds your hand through a personalized retail excursion to fill in your wardrobe blanks. The result is a contemporary, cohesive and neatly organized closet full of clothes. $300 for a five-hour consultation. Personal shopping is individually priced. (617-797-4079). —Samantha House

SLANG CITY

It's been parodied a million times on the big screen, yet it never seems to get old: Foreign exchange student fumbles English colloquialisms while smug Americans yuk it up. Somerville resident and English-as-a-second-language teacher turned Web master A.C. Kemp has taken pity on helpless non-English speakers with SlangCity.com. The site is a guerrilla tour of naughty and nice ways to express yourself, with special features on insults, music and sex talk. Here she chats about talkin' jive with newbies.

IB: Why did you start SlangCity in the first place?
AC: I started teaching English as a second language about eight years ago. My students were asking me questions about slang, and I realized there was a real need for it because they couldn't get the information anywhere else. So the Web site was an extension of the class I taught. I started it just over a year ago.
IB: Who is using the site?
AC: I put it up for my students, but most of the people who go to it are Americans.
IB: What's the most popular part of the site?
AC: Definitely the body parts map, followed by the adult slang picture dictionary. That [section] was very difficult to do without being pornographic. It involves a lot of poses with stuffed animals.
IB: What slang phrases are hardest to explain?
AC: Oh gosh. When I first started teaching, people were always asking about really bad things [like] "What does 'blow me' mean?" You can't use euphemisms. You have to be really explicit. The first year I taught, I was really blushing, but I've gotten over that now.
IB: You interpret pop and rap lyrics a lot on the Web site. How do you find out the meaning of the words such as "milkshake" and "wanksta" if you're not sure?
AC: I look on the Internet, or I'll ask friends. Sometimes I call radio stations. One time I was working on the Missy Elliott song "Work It," and I thought that I knew what she was talking about, but I wanted to be sure before putting it on the site. I called Emerson College's rap station and asked this guy. I think he was pretty embarrassed.
IB: What's your favorite American slang expression in another language?
AC: I had a student once ask me about what Americans say when they have an orgasm. I said, "They say 'I'm coming.'" She said, "In Japan we say, 'I'm going.'" I thought that was the funniest thing.
IB: What are some new slang phrases most people wouldn't have heard yet?
AC: The ones that I tend to get asked about on the Web site are from songs. I've been asked about "milkshake" and "ice cream" lately. They're pretty funny if you listen to the songs.
IB: Last question: Do you know what a Trojan war helmet is?
AC: I have no idea. Do you know what it is?
IB: Yes.

CHEZ NFL

Pregaming... As we write this, it's too early to tell if the Pats will go all the way to Houston, but at least one Patriot is guaranteed to be in Reliant Arena on Super Bowl weekend. Former wide receiver (from 1961–1969) Gino Cappelletti and Chez Henri chef Paul O'Connell will represent New England at the 13th annual Taste of the NFL on Jan. 31. The charitable shindig, which raises funds for hunger relief, features a chef and a player from each NFL city. O'Connell plans to whip up oven-baked crêpes with cardamom-scented eggplant and goat cheese, while Cappelletti will be on hand to sign autographs and mingle with fans.

Chefs Andrew Wilkinson and Otto Hiu Tou of Skipjack's.

Turning the Tables... Looks like it's the season of change at the elegant Four Seasons. The hotel's Bristol Lounge has closed for renovations until early March. The new lounge will feature more bar, table and sofa seating, a refurbished interior in rust and neutral colors, and the debut of daily breakfast—just in time for the hotel's eatery Aujourd'hui to undergo a similar overhaul until June.

Take Shelter... With three floors of space, Sanctuary, which opened New Year's Eve, is more of a giant tapas emporium than a restaurant. The menu, created by former SoHo chef Stephen Lancaster, features Spanish, Asian and Latin dishes and five different kinds of sangria (including the intriguing white sangria). Given general manager Gabe Butcher's soft Irish brogue and his guarantee of "three floors of music and fun" (not to mention the Asian-inspired decor), this is far from your typical tapas bungalow. 189 State St., Boston (617-573-9333).

Sports Arena... At last there's a sports bar and grill fit to fill the void left by Allston's now-defunct Sports Depot. Southie's Stadium opened at the height of postseason football excitement last Thursday—just in time for Sunday's playoff game. The upscale sports bar features two floors, three bars, 30 flat screen TVs (including one in the men's room) and a dance floor. Diners can nosh on typical pub grub like wings, burgers and steaks in a warm atmosphere with hardwood floors and sports memorabilia tacked on the walls. 232 Old Colony Ave., Boston (617-269-5100).

JP Sips... In addition to an eclectic array of ethnic eateries, Jamaica Plain now has a Chinese teahouse. Centre Street's Cha Fahn: A Tea Room, which opened two months ago, offers 35 teas, a light lunch and dinner menu, pastries and desserts. Co-owners Shane O'Brien and Chih-Wei Hung were flirting with the idea of opening a bubble tea lounge, but decided on a more traditional approach. O'Brien says herbal teas—like the fire infusion, a blend of cassia bark, ginger, ginseng, orange peel, licorice root, star anise and black and Sichuan peppercorns—are the best-sellers. 763 Centre St., Jamaica Plain (617-983-3575).

Nice Pile of Brix... Brix Wine Shop isn't your average packie. The South End spirit shop, which opened Dec. 20 on Washington Street under the co-ownership of best friends Carri Wroblewski and Klaudia Mally, boasts a well-rounded inventory as well as a stunning interior with natural cork floors, a back bar wall and a 10-foot marble tasting table. But don't worry, the upscale decor doesn't necessarily reflect the wines' prices. "We wanted to bring the standard of shopping in a retail store to a more boutique level," says Wroblewski. 1284 Washington St., Boston (617-542-2749).

Out to Lunch... Fans of the Back Bay Skipjack's, fear not. The papered windows are not signs of a final farewell but, rather, of better things to come. Renovations are under way to revamp the interior and install a sushi bar. The kitchen will reopen Jan. 30 with the same menu and prices but more daily specials and an extensive sushi menu by master sushi chef Tsui "Otto" Hiu Tou. 199 Clarendon St., Boston (617-536-3500).

TURN-ON TIME

Valentine's Day is approaching, and it's time to kick your libido into high gear. Forget little blue pills. The search for effective, natural aphrodisiacs ends here: These creative suggestions will help you to find that lovin' feeling.

Get ready to get lucky at the Union Oyster House.

✻Dine at the Union Oyster House. Oysters' reputation as an aphrodisiac dates back at least to the second century, when the Roman satirist Juvenal wrote, "What decency does Venus observe...when she eats giant oysters at midnight?" Head to the Union and let the loving begin. $9.95. 41 Union St., Boston (617-227-2750). www.unionoysterhouse.com.

✻Brew up some ginseng tea from Boston Tea Company. Ginseng, which takes its name from the Chinese jen shen ("man root"), is an herb notorious for its energizing effects. In short, downing some hot man root tea is a sure way to ensure a spicy Boston tea party for two. $16. (201-518-5030). www.bostontea.com.

✻Order guacamole at the Olé Mexican Grill. Interestingly, the avocados (which some say resemble certain body parts) are mashed right at your table at Olé. If you fear that all that avocado grinding will get you too heated, you can order the guacamole to go. $9.50. 11 Springfield St., Cambridge (877-816-9996). http://olegrillcambridge.citysearch.com.

✻Try some truffles at L'Espalier. L'Espalier's prix fixe dinner offers several dishes that include the libido-stimulating mushroom. The white truffle and cauliflower soup with Roxbury russet apples and the sole with black truffles are good bets. $68. 30 Gloucester St., Boston (617-262-3023).

✻Order something spicy at Chinatown's Penang. The piquant dishes will leave you in a flushed and heated physical state that mirrors sexual arousal. Try the mee siam with Thai chili sauce, a clay-pot curry, or the spicy sizzling beef. $5.95-$10.95. 685-691 Washington St., Boston (617-451-6373). www.penangboston.com.

✻Make like a bridegroom at the Beacon Hill Bistro. Apparently, 19th-century French grooms were said to have eaten three full courses of asparagus in preparation for their wedding night. If three courses is too extreme for you, just order the smoked salmon with potatoes, greens and asparagus. $8.50. 25 Charles St., Boston (617-723-1133). www.beaconhillhotel.com/bistro.html.

✻Take a ride on the Boston Chocolate Tour. Traverse the city by trolley, stopping along the way to taste a multitude of mouthwatering confections. If Le Meridien's sumptuous Chocolate Bar Buffet doesn't get you in the mood, nothing will. $60. Corner of Charles and Boylston streets, Boston (617-269-3626). Sat. and Sun., 11:30 and 12:45 pm. www.trolleytours.com. —Patrice Taddonio

Rainbow Bright... Oilily, In the Pink and Madura aren't the only splashes of color on Newbury Street these days. Susan Sargent Designs joined the shopping promenade's bold-color brigade in late November. The Vermont-based artist and colorist's custom-designed and Scandinavian-influenced rugs, fabrics, pillows and accessories are infused with her signature palette of periwinkle, paprika, lime, passion and burnt orange—but never gray. "We have been starved for too long in the land of beige," says Sargent. 132 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-2226).

A Rose Is a Rose... In the wake of Trista and Ryan's gauchè gag-fest nuptials, it's amazing anyone would want to step up to bat on ABC's second stab at The Bachelorette. But lo and behold, not one, but two Boston boys joined this season's cast of potential suitors. Harvard graduate and architect Chris Ritter and sports facility manager Brian Holden (both 31) were among the 25 gents vying for the affection of Bob Guiney castoff Meredith last Wednesday night. Neither man went in expecting magic. "I can't really say I thought I was going to meet my soulmate," says Holden. Ritter concurs: "I didn't do it thinking I would find true love." And it's a good thing: The two bachelors were denied roses in the first episode. Both named meeting the other guys in the house as the highlight of the experience.

It Don't Mean a Thing... Think swing dancing's second wind peaked in the '90s? So did we. But apparently West Coast swing (not to be confused with retro big-band swing) is alive and well. Ned Devine's debuts the Left Coast style, which is danced to contemporary R&B, Top-40 and blues, at its new Downtown Swing night Jan. 26. An optional dinner and cocktail hour (5:30-6:30 pm) is followed by a swing demonstration, lessons and open dancing until closing time. Singles and groups are welcome, and admission is $10. One Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston (617-248-8800).

Finding Jesus... You could say the spirit of Christmas literally went missing for Jerry Carvalho this year. The longtime Somerville resident, known for his elaborate manger scene (spotlighted in the IMPROPER's year-end issue), was the victim of two Scrooge-like thefts. Early in December, Carvalho's baby Jesus statuette (originally his father's 40 years ago) was taken from his property by a passerby who used it as a grab gift at an Inman Square coffee shop's holiday party. The statuette was returned the following day by the sympathetic recipient of the "gift." Just a few days after Christmas, Carvalho noticed the baby Jesus was again missing, and early on New Year's Day his sign asking for the return of the statuette was torn down and a beer bottle placed in the empty creche. "Dollar-wise it's not worth a lot," says Carvalho. "It's too bad. Normally we would've left it up until Little Christmas (Jan. 6). We put it up for the enjoyment of others, not for ourselves."

Good Morning, NYC... Mix 98.5's loyal listeners have a little afternoon adjusting to do. Longtime DJ Gregg Daniels just landed a slot on Mix 102.7 FM in New York. After 12 years on the air in Boston, the energetic DJ joins fellow Mix alum Lynn Hoffman on the new morning program. No word on Daniels' replacement, but frankly, with his voice and her style, the new duo might give Howard and Robin a run for their money.

SLIPPING A MICKEY

The real line on Disney World

I just got back from Disney World. Why would a sane adult willingly visit a child-infested theme park, you ask? There's no Ez Jr. or li'l Ezzette running around, which would be the first obvious reason. And I didn't get married and decide I wanted the cheesiest honeymoon south of the Poconos, which would be the second reason. Nope, I just wanted to go on some cool rides. As it turns out, that's the worst reason you could have for going to Disney World. If you want to experience gut-wrenching G-forces and involuntary screams of terror while crammed into a rubbery, vomit-stained seat, Boston's many fine cabbies would be happy to punch your ticket on the Storrow Drive Heart Attaxi. If you want to take a spin on the Aerosmith Rock 'n' Roller Coaster at MGM Studios, however, I have some advice: wear comfortable shoes.

I assume Kofi Annan hasn't heard about Disney's line-routing system, which flouts Geneva Convention prohibitions against psychological torture. I'm surprised I didn't see any Taliban prisoners being interrogated while waiting in line for the Rock 'n' Roller Coaster. You move down to one end of the line, get within feet of the ride's entrance, then turn the corner and plod back to the other end, somewhere near Jacksonville. This process is repeated about 80 times. The upshot is, if the Swedish Bikini Team is in line somewhere in front of you, then you get to check them out every time they go past in the opposite direction. Of course, this being Disney World, the line looked like a bunch of Orcs that had escaped from Middle Earth. You could find a more attractive crowd in an Ozarks strip club. For example, the couple behind us was passing the time by popping each other's zits. I'm not kidding. This guy's girlfriend was squeezing his zits and plucking hairs out of his face, and because of the twisting line I kept seeing them every two minutes. I'm not normally rude to strangers, but these people needed to know that this wasn't what I had in mind when the tram driver in the parking lot told me to have a magical day. "How many more people are they gonna squeeze in this place?" I said loudly as we passed the offending couple. "This ride's gonna burst!" They both gave me dirty looks but didn't relent. I don't even want to think about what they must do when they're not surrounded by hundreds of people. It probably involves gerbils and floor wax.

The Rock 'n' Roller Coaster was worth waiting in line for an hour, if for no other reason than it sped me away from the gruesome Line Trolls for a minute or so. One of the only conscious thoughts in my head as we looped around the track was "I've got to scream a little deeper. I sound like a girl." Then it was off to Indiana Jones and the Temple of Disappointment. This was supposed to be a three-scene act on giant sets with lots of stunts, but before the show, a friendly man with a microphone told us he had good news: The first set was broken and thus couldn't roll out of the way to reveal sets two and three, so we wouldn't get to see the final two scenes. I guess I should just be glad he didn't have bad news, because then I'd probably have caught meningitis from my seat.

The first act was certainly entertaining, with a Harrison Ford stunt-double dodging spears, flames and the famous giant rolling boulder, but the ending was extremely anticlimactic. Indiana got up after the boulder smooshed him and that was it. With that kind of unfulfilled expectation, the boulder should have been blue. Everyone sat there digesting their disappointment before quietly shuffling away. I wanted to scream, "Wally World's closed? You can't close Wally World...The moose says you set is broken, I say it works." But by then I was busy fantasizing about sitting somewhere dark with a beer and some Buffalo wings and a football game on TV. Somewhere that wasn't built to resemble a 19th century trading post with fiberglass rocks outside, which ruled out the greater Orlando area.

Now, as I sit in Boston writing this, the temperature is 2 degrees. There's an overturned coffee on the sidewalk outside my building that I'll be stepping over until March. And waiting in line for a rollercoaster while drinking a beer in 80-degree weather doesn't sound so bad. iB

NICHOLAS MARTIN

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Theatrical giant Nicholas Martin, artistic director of the Huntington Theatre Company, was born in Brooklyn. A graduate of Carnegie Mellon University, he spent 35 years as an actor, appearing in Alice in Wonderland on Broadway and working extensively with San Diego's Old Globe theater company. For 10 years, he belonged to Ellis Rabb's storied APA-Phoenix Repertory Company, whose other members included the likes of Helen Hayes. He left acting 12 years ago to direct, and in 1999 won an Obie award for directing Betty's Summer Vacation. His other New York directing credits include Hedda Gabler (on Broadway), Chaucer in Rome, The Time of the Cuckoo, You Never Can Tell and The Rivals. Among the productions he has helmed at the Huntington are Betty's Summer Vacation—which earned him an Elliot Norton award for Best Director in 2002—Butley, Springtime for Henry, Hedda Gabler, Fully Committed and Dead End. In 2001 he was named to Entertainment Weekly's annual "It List" as one of the Top Creative People in the Country. In addition to his duties with the Huntington and as a drama professor at BU, he is currently preparing to direct a new play on Broadway, Match, starring Frank Langella and Ray Liotta. He lives on Beacon Hill.

Jonathan Soroff: Is directing a desire to play God?

Nicholas Martin: To a certain degree, although most of us would never phrase it that way. There's too much human involvement, if you know what I mean. You're not really pulling the strings, like on a puppet, because they're actors, and actors aren't easy.

JS: Are they a pain in the ass?

NM: By and large, I love actors. The most complicated people, and the ones you have to watch out for, are the playwrights.

JS: I make it a rule never to date either.

NM: Very wise, on both scores. I'm living proof.

JS: Is it my imagination, or is everything on Broadway a bloated, overblown, lowest-common-denominator spectacle?

NM: Exactly. The play I'm doing on Broadway next week is a rarity, because it's a new play and it's not a musical. Makes it worth leaving Boston for seven weeks.

JS: If Shakespeare were alive today, would he be doing Broadway, regional theater, or what?

NM: Shakespeare was Broadway in the Elizabethan world. I think The Taming of the Shrew was Hairspray, and King Lear was Miss Saigon, or Les Mis. Know what I mean?

> LIFE HAS DEALT ME SO MANY UNEXPECTED CATASTROPHES, IT'S BLUDGEONED ME INTO SPONTANEITY. I CAN'T WORRY ABOUT SUPERSTITIONS.

JS: Sure—popular entertainment. So what's the state of the American theater?

NM: Well, I don't want to denigrate Broadway, because I've had a wonderful time there. But it's perilous for serious plays, and even for good solid comedies without music. Elsewhere in the country, like here, the theater is really quite healthy.

JS: Biggest theatrical disaster of your career?

NM: Some people might say my whole acting career, which was the first 35 years of my life. I didn't start directing until 12 years ago. Then again, my life as an alcoholic was a pretty major disaster, too. But at least that has a happy ending…I hope.

JS: What superstitions of the theater do you believe in—like saying "Break a leg" instead of "Good luck," or "the Scottish play" instead of Macbeth*?*

NM: Oh, I'll say Macbeth right here, or tell someone "Good luck." Life has dealt me so many unexpected catastrophes, it's bludgeoned me into spontaneity. I can't worry about superstitions.

JS: You have a track record for getting big names to appear in your productions—Nathan Lane, John C. Reilly, Gwyneth Paltrow. How do you get people like that to come here?

NM: I sleep with them. [Laughs.] I wish! I'm just lucky. Part of the excitement for me is to be able to offer substantial people parts they otherwise wouldn't play. Nathan was one of them. I know some people were disappointed he wasn't singing selections from The Lion King, but those are the breaks.

JS: How do you deal with TV and film actors whose egos have run amok?

NM: Funny you should ask. Only today I was fighting with my New York producers. We're doing a three-character play, and they want a big female star to play opposite Frank Langella and Ray Liotta, who aren't exactly chopped liver. They're pushing a bunch of big names on me—television and movie stars—all of whom are psychotic and would destroy not only me but the street the theater's on. So you have to fight to avoid that.

JS: Biggest diva you ever worked with?

NM: I'll have to say Estelle Parsons. I love her. Don't get me wrong. She was wonderful with me, but she just splintered that cast.

JS: Isn't being a diva sometimes the only way to get things done?

NM: I'm not interested in that. I've had a lot of it, and I won't have it here in Boston. I want to have fun. I want to work with people I love. You know, people say someone like Nathan Lane is a prima donna, and he's a dream to work with. So the answer is no.

JS: Worst thing you ever had to say to an actor?

NM: You're fired.

JS: How about a stage direction?

NM: Stop moving. It's tough, because they don't know they're doing it.

JS: Does Andrew Lloyd Webber deserve the death penalty?

NM: Yeah, as far as I'm concerned, especially since when you hear a song of his, it's stuck in your head for the rest of the day, and you hate yourself for it. I mean, he did what he had to do, but he certainly ruined the musical there for 10 years or so.

JS: Agree or disagree: All weddings, even the bad ones, are good theater?

NM: Absolutely. I was just at a wedding with another director, and we were crying and laughing. I said, "If two mean-spirited show business people are sobbing, it must be a good show."

JS: What everyday scene regularly strikes you as theatrical?

NM: Anyplace where children play.

JS: If you could stage-manage one thing in your life, what would it be?

NM: A more successful search for a significant other. I was never good at it, and since I've taken this job it's been almost impossible.

JS: How about working with animals and children?

NM: I like it. I think they get a bad rap. If you find the right kids or the right dog they're OK. Even an animal that takes a dump onstage—audiences love it. I've never had to deal with anything like that, although several of the actresses I've worked with came close.

JS: Is applause a narcotic?

NM: Oh, yeah. Even for a director. That's the only time I'm jealous of actors. I feel like it's mine. The standing ovation has gotten a little tired, though.

JS: I know! It used to be you couldn't get one in Boston. Now there are standing ovations for things…

NM: …like The Graduate! I know. I was there. [Laughs.] I think people spend so much on tickets, they want to feel they've gotten their money's worth. [But] you wish they'd be a little more selective, although you always want it for your own show.

JS: Last question: Can you believe you get paid to do what you do?

NM: No. It's a gift, and I'm very lucky and very grateful. But at the same time, I feel that my recompense is accurate. [Laughs.]

SINGULAR sensations

TALENT, BRAINS, GOOD DEEDS, GOOD LOOKS... YOU'LL FIND IT ALL IN THIS YEAR'S CROP OF BACHELORS AND BACHELORETTES

With all the egregiously cheesy dating shows on TV—The Bachelor, Joe Millionaire, Average Joe, Boy Meets Bo etc., ad nauseam—it's easy to forget that there are single people out there who:

a) actually care about something other than themselves;
b) have something to offer beyond eight-pack abs, an artificially whitened smile or blandly plastic good looks;
c) aren't obsessively searching for either a mate or a large pile of money;
d) could accurately be described as reasonably sane, stable and baggage free.

Yet they're out there, and Boston happens to be a good place to find them.

As implausible as it may seem in a culture that pushes the idea of coupledom as the ultimate in human fulfillmen being single is not a disease, a handicap or a liability. Nor is everyone worth dating already taken. In fact, we're su rounded by interesting, accomplished and appealing singles who are not spoken for. They're the kind of people you be happy to have your best friend date; the type your parents would approve of. For anyone not paired off, they're t sort you'd be lucky to settle down with.

In compiling our annual list of the city's most eligible bachelors and bachelorettes, we're indebted to our reader who flooded our mailbox with suggestions. We also relied on our own network of contacts. What we've come with, we hope, is an eclectic and diverse cross-section of impressive people who lead full and interesting lives. O group of 10 men and 10 women includes one gay man and one lesbian—the same ratio as the general populatio And finally, by no means are we saying that these are Boston's only worthwhile bachelors and bachelorettes. The are plenty of great catches in the sea, and we sincerely hope that reading this will inspire you to nominate your fa tastic friend/relative/colleague/acquaintance when we publish our ballot again next year.

Here's hoping this gives some inspiration to all you frustrated singletons and makes for interesting reading for the smug marrieds.

GLENN JONES

26, news reporter for Fox25

A native of Bermuda, Jones is a perfect gentleman: In that island's strong British tradition, he treats women with the utmost respect, even observing such niceties as opening doors and pulling out chairs. After graduating from the Williston Northampton School in western Mass., he studied broadcast journalism at Emerson College, which named him one of its distinguished young alumni. During four years as a TV reporter in Fort Myers, Fla., he won several Associated Press awards and covered such stories as Jeb Bush's reelection, the Florida recount and the launch of the space shuttle. In October, he returned to Boston to work as a morning reporter for Fox, where his schedule has him eating dinner at 5 pm, in bed by 7:30 and waking at 2:45 am. Despite the grueling hours—he says the only other part of the job that he dislikes is wearing makeup—he finds time for an active social life. In addition to being an avid golfer, he works out daily ("If you're gonna wear those ugly socks and Bermuda shorts," he jokes, "you gotta have nice legs") and loves playing baseball, softball and soccer. At home, he's a voracious reader, enjoying the latest best-sellers and subscribing to numerous magazines. He loves to cook, with baking (especially cookies) a specialty. His musical tastes embrace everything from opera to pop, hip-hop and jazz, while weekend jaunts to places like New Orleans, Mohegan Sun or home to Bermuda are his preferred way to recharge his batteries. To top it all off, he's well dressed and as handsome as they come, with a shy, introverted side that's like catnip to the ladies.

LORIE KOMLYN

33, high school administrator

A force of nature, with looks to match, Komlyn grew up in Connecticut and came to Boston as a teenager to study ballet and modern dance at the arts high school where she now works. At Washington University, in St. Louis, she majored in psychology and women's studies while performing with a modern dance company. She then spent a year with the New England Dance Theater in Stamford, Conn. As a volunteer in the office, she developed an interest in licensing rights and copyright management while working to acquire performance rights to a piece of music. That interest led her to earn a law degree (specializing in entertainment law) at Golden Gate University in San Francisco. After clerking for a family court judge in Connecticut and working at a sports marketing agency in New York, she moved back to Boston and further broadened her resume with a stint as a private investigator and a year of teaching fourth grade. Eventually, she found a position that combined her love for education and the arts, returning three and a half years ago to her alma mater, where she serves as senior associate dean for admission and placement. She's a member of the Classics Dance Theatre, an interactive nonprofit ballet company that teaches dance, performance and stagecraft to schoolchildren throughout New England, and an avid figure skater who takes lessons at the Skating Club of Boston. She subscribes to the symphony, belongs to the Appalachian Mountain Club and adores hiking, camping and skiing. This summer, her goal is to learn to ride a Harley. A vegetarian, she admits she's not a great cook, but then again, you can't be good at everything.

JESSE LEVEY

24, CEO of United Leaders

It's hard to believe that at the tender age of 24, Levey has already founded a thriving nonprofit. He actually started United Leaders in his college dorm room. Four years later, it's a nationally recognized, million-dollar organization with offices in Cambridge, San Francisco and Washington, D.C. A self-described "social and political entrepreneur," Levey started the group as a nonpartisan organization aiming to recruit and train the next generation of leaders in politics and public policy. Last year, 750 applicants from more than 200 schools in 46 states vied for the 36 fellowships United Leaders awarded. On top of that, he was tagged "politically hip" by the Boston Globe. Born and raised in the Bay Area, he studied political science and communications at Tufts. He's an avid runner who has completed the Boston Marathon and is currently training for one in Vienna. He loves the theater and has appeared in several Shakespearean productions at Tufts, including The Merry Wives of Windsor and Romeo and Juliet. He loves to entertain and hosts regular martini nights in his South End apartment. As for sustenance, he mostly dines out and is a regular at all the hottest spots in town. Fluent in Spanish and willing to talk to anyone, he's passionate about working toward political change—a marked characteristic since he was 4 years old. Add to that his clean-cut good looks, and it's obvious why we've dubbed him one of the city's sexiest young do-gooders.

MIKE BATTISTA

25, professional lacrosse player for the Boston Cannons

A hunka, hunka burnin' hottie, Newton native Battista studied communications and advertising at Loyola in Maryland. He works as a sales rep for Atlantic Sportswear, a company that sells athletic apparel to colleges and high schools, while pursuing a second career as a Major League Lacrosse midfielder. His training regimen includes a daily two-hour workout that keeps him in Olympian athletic condition. A former BMX bike racer, he's a fanatical Patriots fan and spends as much time as possible in the summer at his family's place in Yarmouth. Being a complete jock doesn't preclude a creative side, though; like all nice Italian boys, he's an excellent cook who can make mouthwatering ravioli and gnocchi. He's also not shy around a karaoke machine, belting out a Sinatra classic or some tricky top-40 tune with the aplomb of a pop star. A casual, easygoing guy who's equally at home at a dance club or a neighborhood bar, he's got the kind of smoldering good looks that give women heart palpitations. There ought to be a bumper sticker that says, "Lacrosse players do it however they want."

on-air personality, WBCN 104 FM

A witty, sexy bundle of contradictions, Melissa (who won't divulge her age) played clarinet in the band and belonged to the pep squad at Kings Park High School on Long Island. But she describes herself as "the cheerleader from hell—grumpy, with Bon Jovi hair that actually stuck out the sunroof of my car." As a child, she wanted to be an actress, but a career in radio satisfies her desire to be center-stage. In contrast to the music geeks who go into radio because of an encyclopedic knowledge of music, Melissa is there to entertain, which she does brilliantly, as co-host of the Deek & Melissa show weeknights from 7 to midnight. After graduating from Ithaca College, she came to Boston and began interning at 'BCN while hosting "A Feast of Irish Music" under the pseudonym Siobhan on WATD in Marshfield. "It was hilarious," she recalls, "I came on right after 'Planting and Gardening'—this Jewish chick from Long Island pretending to be Irish and playing bagpipe music." Her big break at 'BCN came after seven years, when program director Oedipus put her on the air opposite Deek last April Fools' Day. Since then, she's built a following of listeners who tune in for the show's goofy but intelligent repartee. Her own taste in music ranges from Bach to the Beatles to Audioslave, and her unusual hours allow her to keep the rock and roll schedule of sleeping till noon, going to the gym and arriving for work late in the afternoon. She lives with her cat, Leroy, whom she insists is "the smartest cat on the planet, a genius, and definitely smarter than most of the men I've dated." Guys without a sense of humor need not apply.

PETER DZIEDZIC

26, corporate lawyer at Ropes & Gray

Our gay bachelor is quite the go-getter. Born and raised in Southington, Conn., Dziedzic went to Yale, where he was student activities coordinator for his residential college and organized a casino night that Rolling Stone magazine dubbed one of the "Top 10 parties in the country." At 19, he ran for public office, losing a race for state rep but feeding a lifelong passion for politics and public policy (he says his dream job would be White House chief of staff). A graduate of the University of Virginia School of Law, he's now a second-year associate at one of Boston's most venerable white-shoe firms, where he helps structure major deals. Currently he's editing an amicus brief on gay marriage to the Supreme Judicial Court on behalf of law professors and international human rights groups. An avid sports fan, he played intramural hockey in college, competes in a gay softball league and enjoys racquetball, golf, skiing and running. As for spectator sports, he's a college basketball fanatic. On the artistic side, he played clarinet in high school and once soloed with the Hartford Symphony. Although he rarely gets the opportunity to cook, he enjoys spending time in the kitchen. A weakness for all the latest electronic gadgets and a drive to try all the newest restaurants draw him out as often as possible, although his gorgeous Back Bay pad is a sweet place to kick back and relax.

MONIQUE BURNS

37, co-founder, New Leaders for New Schools, and CEO, the Principal Initiativ

With her priorities in the right ord and an amazing ability to get things don not to mention a casually elegant beau she's the kind of person most of us on dream of being.

COURTNEY MEI O'REGAN

22, public relations manager at Caprice

Yowzah, yowzah, yowzah! This spectacular young woman of "Chirish" descent (her mother is Chinese; her father is Irish) is a Holliston native who graduated last May from BU. As public relations manager for Caprice, she handles the popular Theater District nightspot's advertising and plans private functions and special events—think J.Lo in The Wedding Planner, minus the weddings. Well-traveled (she's an old hand at Europe and last year spent two weeks touring India), she's also an avid reader who belongs to a book club and whose tastes lean toward literary fiction (Gabriel Garcia Marquez is a favorite). Her thirst for knowledge and new experiences has led her to take hip-hop classes at the gym and teach herself to cook, and her New Year's resolutions are to learn how to breakdance and how to spin like a professional DJ. Free time finds her doing yoga, running or dancing at a club, and while she describes herself as "a bit of a nerd," we're more apt to describe her as perfectly lovely.

JIM RUSHTON

33, director of sales for WEEI 850 AM and WRKO 680 AM

You'd be hard pressed to find a more optimistic or energetic individual than this Worcester native, who studied economics and government at Hamilton College in upstate New York. He began his career in radio at Mix 98.5 and in 1996 joined WEEI to handle the station's business development. By 1998, he was local sales manager. He was named general sales manager the following year and gained his current position in 2001. Throughout his steady ascent up the corporate ladder, the contagiously upbeat Rushton has played as hard as he's worked, becoming a regular at all the hottest spots in town and spending as much time as possible with friends. A home improvement nut, he enjoys working on projects at his summer house in West Dennis, where you're also liable to find him playing golf, kayaking or kicking back on the beach. A four-time Boston marathoner, he runs to relax and works out four times a week. During the winter, he enjoys heading north to the ski slopes. He's a major sports fan who attends home games at Fenway 40-50 times per season and also loves going to Patriots games (a perk of his job is excellent seats). Involved in numerous charities through his work, he's also a co-founder of the Commonwealth Courage Foundation, which raises money for the families of 9/11 victims. An all-around good guy, he's devoted to his family and as sweet and good-natured as they come.

SHAWN FEDDEMAN

30, Governor Mitt Romney's press secretary

Infectiously upbeat, she's been known to skip through the halls of the State House, but this savvy political operative is no lightweight. A native of Potomac, Md., Feddeman attended an all-girls school in Bethesda before earning a B.A. in English and French at Holy Cross in Worcester. She returned to the D.C. area to work in public affairs before moving back to Massachusetts in 1996 to work on then-governor William Weld's senatorial campaign. From there, she worked at the Department of Social Services for a year before becoming assistant press secretary to Paul Cellucci. She paid her dues in the governor's press office for four years and later worked on Romney's 2002 campaign for governor. In December of that year, she was named Romney's press secretary, a job she's handled with flair and finesse. Although the demands of her career require long hours, she still finds time to run (she's done both the Marine Corps and Chicago marathons and is contemplating Boston), travel (a trip to Thailand is planned for this spring) and read voraciously (history and best-sellers top her list). A sports nut who's a fanatical Redskins fan (sorry Pats), she knows her way around a kitchen thanks to cooking lessons in Strasbourg, France. (She also speaks fluent French.) Fans of the Learning Channel's While You Were Out may recall her from the episode when her State House office got the makeover treatment. Appealing in just about every way, she's like a cross between Mary Tyler Moore and Mary Matalin, with a highly developed sense of how to have a good time.

JORDAN TOBINS

27, owner of the Upper Crust

It's hard to see beyond his J. Crew catalog looks, but when you dig a little deeper, Tobins gets more and more interesting. A native of Sharon, he graduated from Roxbury Latin and then Williams College, where he received a B.A. in neuroscience and psychology. He worked in the restaurant industry throughout college and fell in love with the business. In 2001, he opened the Upper Crust, a Beacon Hill pizza joint that combines mom-and-pop casualness and comfort with a sleek techno look. Its instant success allowed him to open a second location in Coolidge Corner, and this month, another is slated to start doing business in Key West, Fla. Not surprisingly, he has plans for further expansion. An avid boater, he spends as much time as possible at his family's place on the Cape. He's learning to fly as well. He fits in air time whenever possible and has only one hour of flying time to go before qualifying for his private pilot's license. On warm weekend mornings, he takes two-wheeled excursions on his Ducati motorcycle. An excellent cook, he speaks French and wrestled competitively throughout high school and college. He also enjoys singing, getting together semiregularly for jam sessions with his guitar-playing roommate and other musician friends. In short, he's a bit like the improbably talented heartthrob on a daytime soap opera.

ROBIN SHEEDY

29, corporate lawyer at Hemenway and Barnes

This gorgeous dynamo, of Japanese and Native American ancestry, was raised in upstate New York and graduated from Western New England College in Springfield, Mass. As an undergrad, Sheedy worked as a police officer in Yarmouth, dealing with the usual bar brawls and domestic disturbance calls, but participating in a few drug busts as well. With a scholarship to New England School of Law, she earned her J.D., and she also has a master's from BU in banking and financial law. For the past two years, she has worked with venture capital funds and technology startups, structuring private equity financing and commercial loan transactions for one of Boston's most prestigious old firms. A triathlete and marathoner (she completed Boston's last year), she swims, bikes and runs and has become an avid ice climber. In her spare time, in addition to pro bono work, she mentors an eighth grader through Citizen Schools and plays flute in a trio (her minor in college was music performance). Her extensive travels have included a three-week trek to one of the base camps of Mount Everest, and in March, she's taking a two-and-a-half-month sabbatical to return to Nepal and work as a base-camp manager for a film expedition. Adventurous, accomplished and devastatingly attractive, she's a triple threat and the total package.

JOHN MONAHAN

38, news reporter for Fox25

What can we say? Fox25 is just crawling with foxes. A Dorchester boy who attended BC High followed by UMass (where he earned a B.A. in broadcast communications), Monahan started his career in TV at a local cable access channel. From there, he moved to California, working for nine years at Fox and CBS affiliates in Monterey. Highlights of his California career included interviewing then-president Bill Clinton and various movie stars. But perhaps most memorable was his ride in a news copter that was forced to crash-land on an aircraft carrier eight miles off the coast. He interrupted his California years to spend six months in Salamanca, Spain, working toward a graduate degree. In 2000, he returned to Boston, and he now applies his reporter's derring-do on the evening news. With mornings off, he works out, and he plans to return to two of his loves: painting (acrylics and watercolors) and improving his guitar playing. He's also looking for a volunteer opportunity to parallel the experience he had as a Rotarian in California, working on public service projects like blood drives, painting a senior citizens home and installing outdoor lighting for a high school playing field. He says he's a hazard in the kitchen, but he can barbecue with the best of 'em. Whenever he can, he likes to give his passport a workout on trips to places like Brazil and Turkey. All that, and handsome to boot.

SUZY AMOR

26, grad student

Gorgeous is only the shallowest of the adjectives that describe our lesbian bachelorette. In addition to being smokin', Amor is smart, sporty, sophisticated and super cool. Born and raised in Connecticut, the child of Portuguese parents, she speaks that language, as well as Spanish, fluently. As a child, she spent summers at her family's home in Portugal, and she embodies that country's laid-back, friendly, hospitable vibe, as well as its chic European flair. A graduate of Simmons College, where she studied human biology and played on the soccer team, she's currently working toward a graduate degree as a physician's assistant (while working in the restaurant business and exploring modeling opportunities) and hopes to specialize in pediatrics. Wild about animals, she's utterly devoted to her two Labrador retrievers, a chocolate and a yellow, with whom she spends much of her spare time hiking and running. This spring, she plans to complete the Boston Marathon. In the winter, she snowboards, and in summer, she surfs. An avid reader with a taste for the classics, she's an outstanding chef (traditional French and Italian cuisine are her specialties), and she studied the piano for six years at the prestigious Yamaha School of Music. A wine buff, she occasionally attends tastings, and her passionate interest in science leads her frequently to natural history and science museums. Well-rounded, well-read, well-spoken and well-dressed, she's everything a woman could wish for.

SUSANNA AND ROUSANNA GEVONDIAN

28, registered nurses, entrepreneurs and graduate students

These absurdly sexy twins were born in Armenia and raised there until the age of 15, spending a year in Moscow before emigrating to the United States. After attending St. Elizabeth's Medical Center School of Nursing in Boston, they practiced as registered nurses while attending UMass Boston, Rousanna studying neuroscience and Susanna chemistry. Both are now in the second year of an M.B.A. program, concentrating in health care management. Simultaneously, they work as managers for Violet Cosmetics, an all-natural skin care line from Europe, and are developing a business plan to expand its distribution. Avid volleyball and tennis players, their numerous accomplishments were recently highlighted in Builders and Leaders magazine, a Boston University publication. Fluent in Armenian, Russian and English, with a passing knowledge of French, they love to dance, especially salsa or Latin, and they're rarely apart. Like the super-sexy Eastern European Bond girl from the Cold War era—times two—they're gorgeous, exotic, resourceful and smart.

RONALD TAMLER

28, M.D., Ph.D., M.B.A.

A one-man brain trust, this dashing European with a hint of a British accent is the sort of cerebral overachiever that women who go for intellect are liable to get the vapors over. Hailing from Dusseldorf (and a rarity for his generation in being a German-born Jew), Tamler was schooled primarily in Germany, where he acquired both his courtly, old-world manners and fluency in four languages—German, English, French and Hebrew. (His knowledge of Latin allows him to understand a smattering of other tongues as well.) After earning a Ph.D. and a doctorate in free-radical biology, as well as an M.B.A., he moved to the Boston area two and a half years ago because he had fallen in love with the city on an earlier visit. He is now a senior resident at Boston Medical Center and plans to specialize in endocrinology. Passionate about everything that captures his imagination, he's a bit of a gadget freak and spends free time swimming in Newton's Crystal Lake (near his home), reading the greats (volumes by Anton Chekhov and Phillip Roth are currently on his nightstand), and playing piano and synthesizer. Although his doctoring duties keep him occupied, he still finds time to explore his adopted city, which he does with a wide-eyed wonder that makes him delightful company. In fact, the only negative comment we've heard about him is his penchant for making puns, but one look into his striking blue eyes, and most women, we're sure, would forgive him. IB

BEYOND the BIG ten

With a huge variety of wines awaiting discovery, it's time to venture out of your comfort zone. Here's a guide to getting started.

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.
PHOTOGRAPHED BY TONY SCARPETTA

Burgeoning enrollments in local wine classes hint at this fact: More people are having fun with wine than ever before, enjoying it casually and on a regular basis. And why not? It's an excellent contemporary cocktail and a natural partner to all of the flavorful and creative food we've been eating. Last year at this time, we ran a feature ("Wine Hits Its Prime") that addressed some common questions and presented practical tips to help readers learn to enjoy wine, a Wine 101 of sorts. Now, a year later, we offer advice for taking your enjoyment of wine to the next level, with specific tips for exploring the huge variety of options that exist beyond the top 10 wines (chardonnay, merlot, cabernet sauvignon and company) that most people know.

A Word About Quality

Although it doesn't have to be this way, most wine drinkers don't start out as adventurous explorers; we advance forward in small steps from familiar turf. That's not surprising. Consider vegetables. Few toddlers naturally like the taste of broccoli, spinach or kale; it doesn't matter that those foods are "good for you" or that some adults eat them with enthusiasm. Kids tend to start with the mild-tasting or sweet vegetables, like carrots, then move on from there.

Similarly, the novice wine drinker often can't appreciate the taste of a bolder-flavored wine, even one that's rated highly by "experts." That's why it makes no sense to preach to wine novices that they must enjoy the wine equivalents of spinach. They likely will find these bolder wines too strong or "bitter" and may have difficulty opening to their flavors in the future.

The wine styles that are hardest to appreciate without considerable tasting experience are the ones that most professional wine critics tend to hold in the highest esteem. But just as with children and vegetables, adults are sometimes uncomfortable when they're told they should like wines that don't taste good to them. The difference is that adults will often believe the experts are right and their own palate is somehow wrong. Surveys have shown that a lot of occasional wine drinkers worry about making the wrong selection in a social situation, fearing they'll appear unsophisticated. On the other hand, wine novices don't want to be pushed into buying a wine they won't like. No wonder it's so much easier to just drink beer.

It helps the budding wine enthusiast to remember that the only definition of a "good wine" that counts is a wine that appeals to you with the food you like to eat. It has nothing to do with ratings, recommendations or anyone else's so-called expert opinion. For instance, the same critic who adamantly dismisses wines that he or she considers too sweet might also use sugar and milk in Asian green tea or European roast coffee. Why? Because they like it better that way, regardless of how the tea or coffee is "supposed" to be enjoyed.

What's Popular Now

The wines that do best in today's market are affordable, featuring labels that are easy to understand and flavors that appeal to a variety of consumers. They're well marketed, easy to buy and easy to "use." Just like most beer. The difference is that the typical beer consumer exhibits strong brand loyalty, whereas wine drinkers tend to experiment freely among styles, much like some diners who "live to eat" do. Wine can be confusing though, and for this reason people tend to stick within a range. The Wine Market Council, a nonprofit association of grape farmers, producers and sellers of wine, recently conducted a survey of consumer habits to determine why people end up choosing particular wines. It found that for most consumers, the type or variety of wine was the single most important variable, followed closely by price. (The good news here is that prices are moderating lately, with many wines that were almost impossible to find now offered by the glass at top restaurants, as supply continues to outstrip demand.) The brand of wine turns out to be a less significant factor than its type or price, and the country or region where the wine was produced appears to be the least important factor of all in influencing product choice.

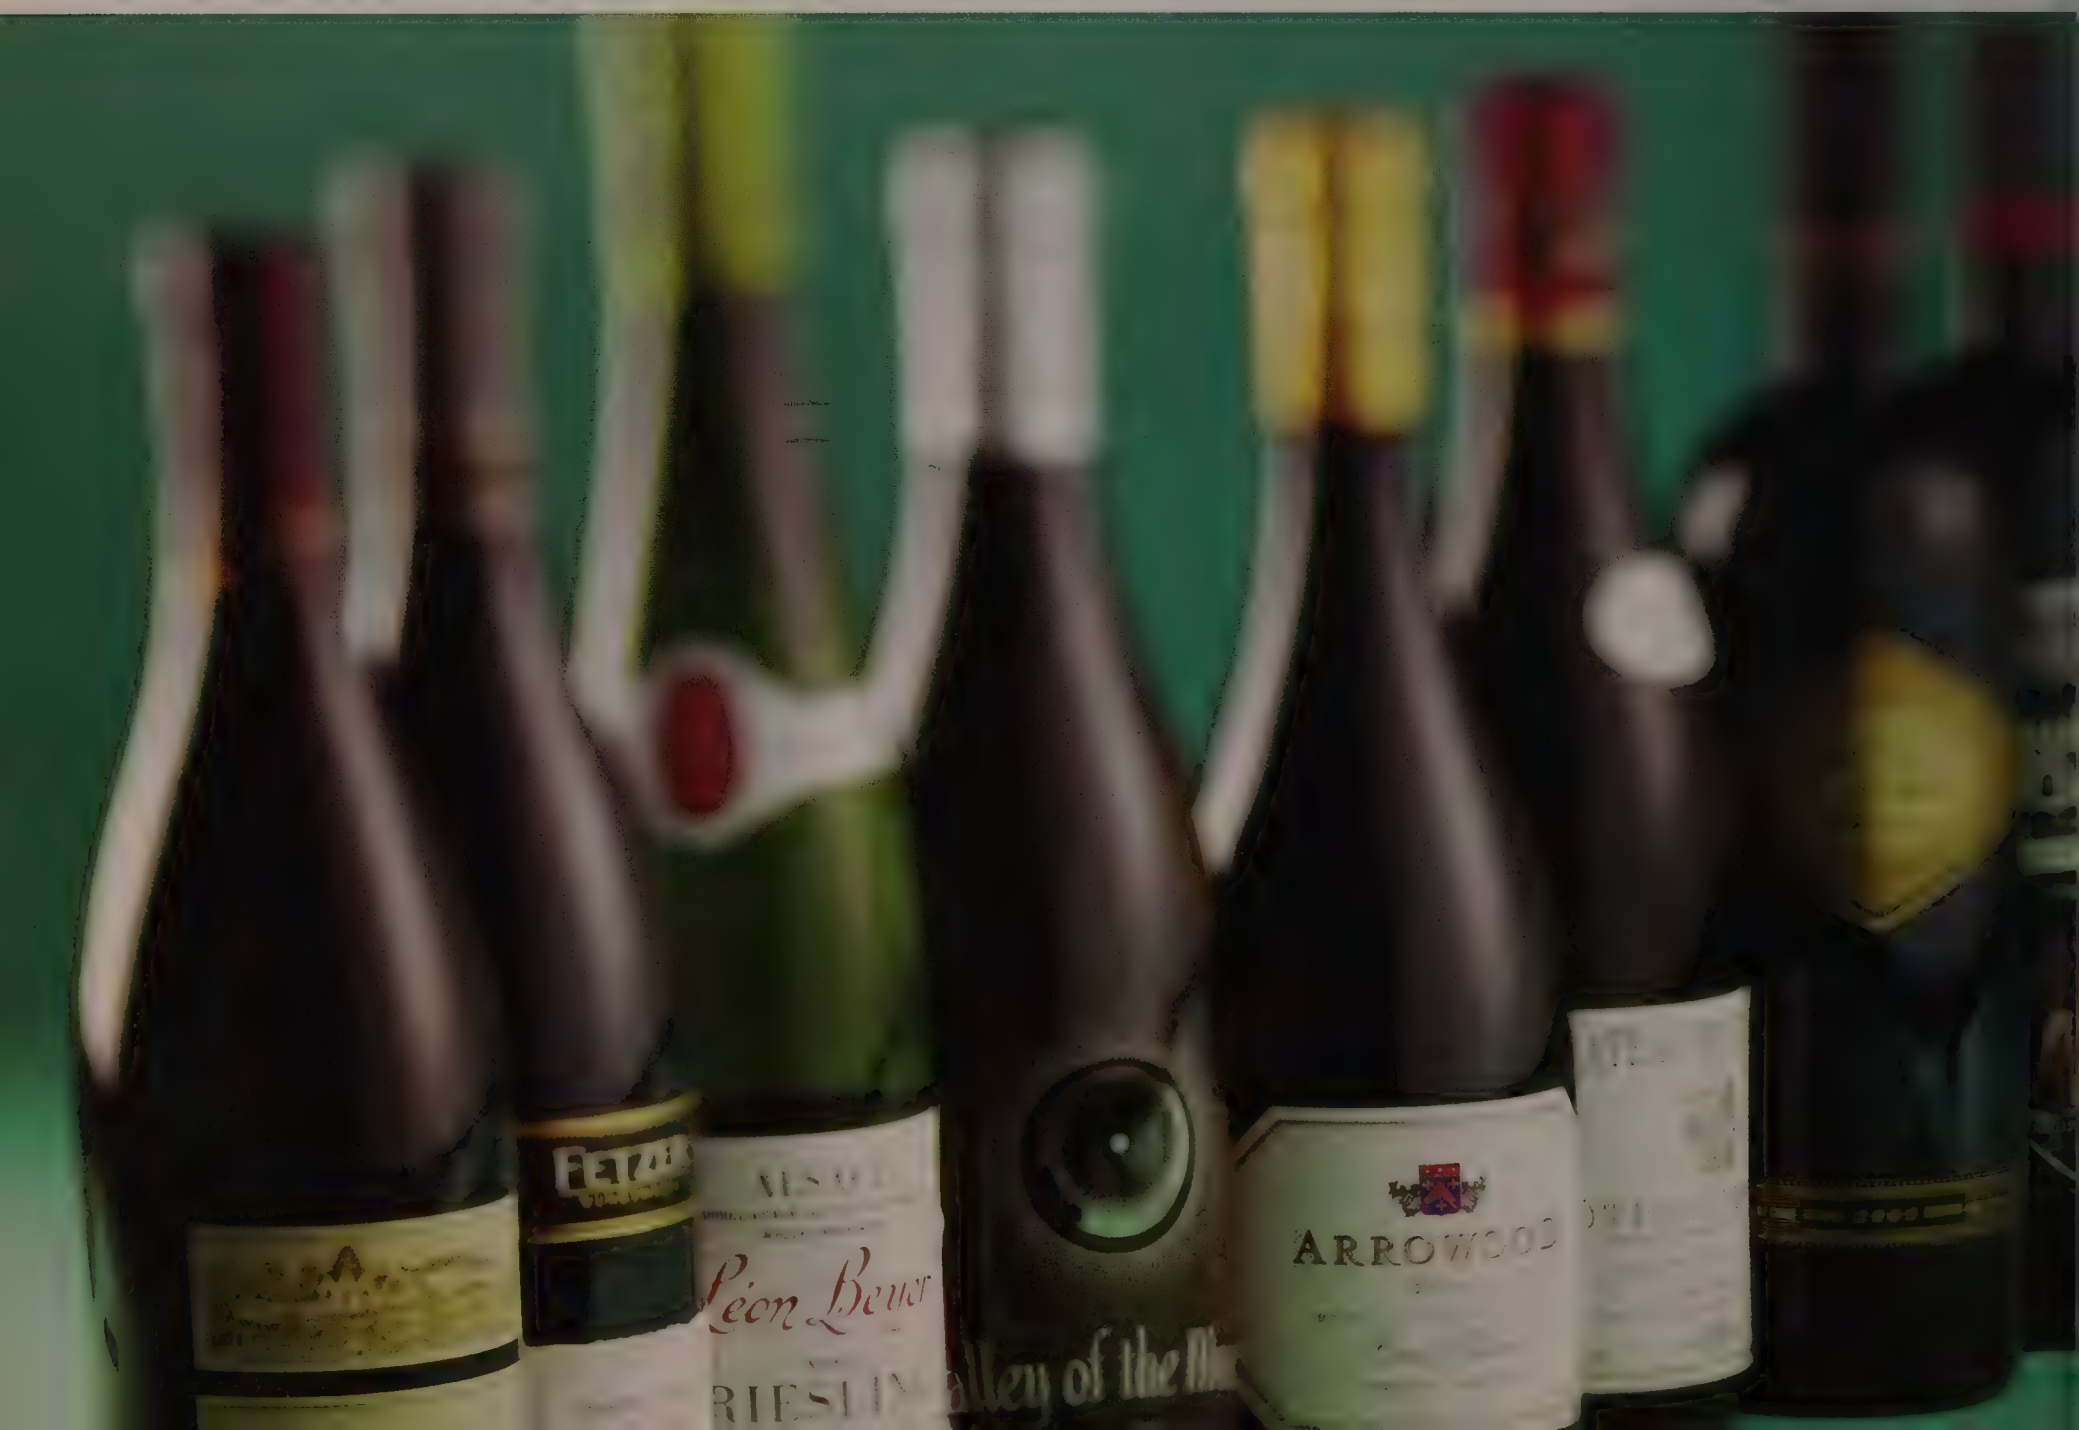
So the message is clear: Most of us are looking for wines in a comfort zone—flavors we know we like at the price we're willing to pay, whatever that might be.

That explains why only a few popular varieties continue to dominate the wine market in the U.S. They're long-term winners, easy for people to remember and buy. So what are we drinking today? Increasingly more red wine, and, for now at least, 75 percent American wine. As of last year, the number one category of American wine, by far, remained chardonnay, which constituted 34 percent of varietal wine sales. Merlot was second at 17 percent, cabernet sauvignon next at 15 percent and white zinfandel fourth, with 14 percent. So those "big four" account for 80 percent of the market. The only others to register were sauvignon blanc (5 percent), zinfandel (3 percent) and pinot noir (2 percent). Among the imports, pinot grigio was as dominant a number one choice as chardonnay was among domestic varietals, followed by Australian shiraz. Both of these categories continue to grow dramatically each year. If we add Chianti, which is next in popularity, we have the 10 basic "flavors" that constitute the wine-drinking repertoire of most Americans.

The Next Step

Of course, there's a lot more variety available than this top 10 list would suggest; one glance at the selections your typical conscientious wine merchant displays will prove that point. But there's a gap between the bounty of choices available and what peopl for the most part, are buying. If you've found your comfort zone among the most popul types of wine but are beginning to feel you're in a rut, you might want to explore the fo lowing alternatives. These less popular wines (listed with their retail price range per b tle) are comparable to the best-sellers in their flavor profiles but can add a little mo spice to your wine-drinking adventures.

If you like chardonnay…try a pinot blanc or a Chablis



Chardonnay's so popular because it's mild and relatively full bodied and, most impo tantly, it marries well with oak flavors. There's a buttery richness many chardonnays e hibit that appeals to some palates.

Pinot blanc is related. It originates, like chardonnay, in Burgundy, but is usually ev milder in flavor, lower in acidity and slightly lighter in body. Its most appealing traits i its soft texture, which gives it a creamy feel on your palate, and the faint hint of spic which you'll taste in the finish, after swallowing. Because it's so mild, it pairs well wi spicy dishes. Good pinot blanc is grown all over California and the Pacific Northwe Alsace in France, and Friuli in northern Italy, where it's labeled "pinot bianco." (Pri range: $10 to $20.)

Wines from Chablis, a village in northern France, are actually 100 percent chardo nay in composition, but they have a slightly different flavor profile than your avera California, Australian or Chilean chardonnay. They're crisper in acidity and show strong suggestion of minerality in the flavor. Chablis is a wonderful choice for seafoo including raw shellfish, and it's most popular among chardonnay drinkers who don't pr fer the rich buttery style but tend to go for wines with a bit of an edge to their flavo Chablis also tends to be a touch lighter in body than most other chardonnays, so it's great way to begin a meal. (Price range: $15 to $40.)

If you like pinot grigio…try a muscadet or an Oregon pinot gris

Pinot grigio is light, easy drinking, and somewhat bland, sometimes featuring a hint "spritz." It doesn't have much of a bite and is popular as a cocktail or with lighter dish and because it doesn't have strong flavor it's adaptable to a wide range of cuisines.

Muscadet is a French wine from the Loire Valley that, like some pinot grigio, is bottled right from the yeast, without significant aging. It's low in alcohol and has a refreshing taste. The difference is that muscadet is more piquant than pinot grigio, with slightly sharper flavors that suit it beautifully for mussels or oysters. But it's got that same light-bodied, easy-drinking feel. (Price range: $8 to $12.)

Oregon pinot gris is a natural extension because it's made from the same grape as pinot grigio, but here you generally get more apple, more spice and, often, some oak aging, which makes the wine more medium bodied than light. (Think pinot grigio after it's worked out in the gym for several months.) Sometimes a lush, silky Oregon pinot gris will have just a touch of sweetness, so if this is a characteristic you want to avoid, ask your server or wine seller. (Price range: $12 to $18.)

If you like sauvignon blanc...try an Orvieto or an Alsace riesling

Sauvignon blanc has become popular because of its incomparably zesty, citric accent, which can be a dream with so many different foods that display salty, tart or even mild, bland flavors.

Orvieto, a wine from Italy's Umbria region, is composed primarily of trebbiano, a sharp-tasting grape with a hint of lemon. Usually bottled without any oak aging, Orvieto's very fresh tasting and clean, without the extremely acidic edge that many sauvignons have. Wonderful as an aperitif, it's also great with pasta (hold the red sauce) and shrimp. (Price range: $10 to $15.)

Sauvignon blanc fans can find a wonderful surprise in Alsace riesling—it's bone dry (usually, make sure you ask) and every bit as acidic, but generally gentler on the palate. The acids tend to be less aggressive than with sauvignon blanc, and more mouthwatering. Featuring aromas that are floral and applelike, Alsace riesling is a super wine with salty dishes, like ham or sausages, as well as with white-meat dishes like pork or roast chicken. (Price range: $15 to $30.)

If you like white zinfandel...try a German riesling

This recommendation is a stretch, because it's been shown that most white zin drinkers—who like the wine's sweetness and mild, gentle, strawberrylike fruit—won't drink any other wine. German rieslings, particularly wines originating in the Rheinhessen or Pfalz regions, tend to be every bit as sweet as white zinfandel but with more acidity and more flavor, most of it on the apricot, apple and peach side of the fruit spectrum. These are gentle, soft, straightforwardly fruity wines with interesting flavors, and they work well with the spiciest dishes. (If you're looking for more spice or more flavor nuance try rieslings from, respectively, the Rheingau or Mosel-Saar-Ruwer region.) They're also great served extremely cold before dinner. Generally those graded "Kabinett" are the best bets, although prices are considerably higher than for any white zinfandel. (Price range: $12 to $25.)

If you like merlot...try a carmenere

Merlot may be slipping a bit, but it remains incredibly popular because it's flavorful but smooth, without painful acid or tannins.

Carmenere from Chile is an interesting story. Once confused with merlot, it's now bottled as a separate varietal although the two are related. Carmenere tends to have a touch more spice than merlot and is just a bit fuller in body. But it's got that same soft, round, velvety feel and a similar blackberrylike flavor. You can drink it with very casual fare, like burgers, or dress it up and serve it with a steak. (Price range: $9 to $25.)

If you like cabernet sauvignon...try a cabernet Franc

Cabernet sauvignon is the red wine aristocrat, highly aromatic, rich in flavor, full in body, with strong tannins and a capacity to develop over time in the bottle into a more complex, interesting drink. It's classic with lamb.

A member of the same family, cabernet Franc tends to have more acidity and a bit less in the way of tannins. More medium- than full-bodied, it's also got a somewhat herbal, green edge to the flavor; where cabernet sauvignon can be lush and sappy, this variety usually shows more of a crisp, vegetal side to balance the dominant dark berry flavors. Some is made in California, some beautiful ones are produced up in Washington, and probably among the most interesting examples come from the Loire Valley. These wines, under the obscure appellations of Chinon and Bourgeuil, provide a uniquely tart, refreshing interpretation of the grape. (Price range: $10 to $30.)

If you like shiraz...try a syrah or a Côtes du Rhone

Shiraz is on fire because it's got it all: spice, loads of flavor, low tannin levels and an easy price point.

Syrah is the same grape as shiraz, although wines labeled as syrah tend to be a touch rougher, with more understated fruit and perhaps more pepper. Generally, they're slightly less satisfying as a cocktail but can be more interesting with heartier, slow-cooked dishes. Although syrah isn't on the radar screen among the varietals that are popular from California, it's been the fastest-growing new grape there for the past several years. Washington also makes great syrah, and Chile has been getting in on the act too, with some delicious, richly fruity wines. (Price range: U.S. $12 to $25, Chile $10 to $20.)

The southern French blend Côtes du Rhone generally incorporates some syrah, along with grenache and other grapes. It has a more rustic feel than Australian shiraz, with less direct fruitiness, more alcohol and more earthy tones. But it's a terrific choice for all kinds of casseroles and stews. (Price range: $10 to $18.)

If you like Chianti...try a barbera or a Montepulciano d'Abruzzo

Chianti, in all its permutations, is on the leading edge of our never-ending romance with Italian food. It's great with red sauces because of its tart, cherrylike flavors.

Barbera, a grape from Piedmont in northern Italy, is among the most underrated in the world. Like Chianti (which is made from the sangiovese grape), barbera has strong acids, but it tends to have a bit of an earthier feel, with less tannin. Most importantly, with barbera there's more of the red fruit feel in the "middle" of the palate than there often is with Chianti. Barbera is a very adaptable, easy-to-like wine that can go with everything from lasagna to roasted veal chops. (Price range: $12 to $25.)

Montepulciano d'Abruzzo, from a region further south in Italy, is a sharp-tasting, less potent, lighter-bodied version of Chianti. It's made for red sauces, the zingy Montepulciano fruit echoing the tomato flavors of pizza or a spaghetti dish. It's a casual style of wine that doesn't require a big investment. Just be sure you like tart flavors. (Price range: $7 to $10.)

If you like zinfandel...try a petite sirah

Zinfandel is a powerhouse of a wine, often with alcohol levels in excess of 15 percent, that's got loads of gulpable fruit and usually moderate tannins.

Petite sirah—darker, bolder, more rustic and more peppery—outdoes zinfandel. Where some zins have a soft fruit elegance, petite sirah, which like zinfandel hails from California, is all about overstatement. It's a great winter wine, especially with very hearty dishes, including all kinds of grilled, even charred meat. In fact, a bit of petite sirah is often added to zinfandel to deepen its color and intensify its flavor. The only problem is that petite sirah is not planted in great quantities and can be harder to find. (Price range: $10 to $25.)

And finally, if you like pinot noir...sorry, there's nothing else like it. Except maybe a Rioja, sometimes. But there's so much variety in pinot that you can explore it endlessly without getting bored. IB

ADVICENIK MAMA SENDS LETTERS

A Life in Letters: Ann Landers' Letters to Her Only Child* is compiled and annotated by Margo Howard.

This most scrumptiously adored daughter, Margo, received many missives over the years from her famous mother, advice columnist Ann Landers. They're bursting with wild energy—often with a kind of vaudevillian ta daaa!—and, of course, opinions and advice. To her much-nicknamed daughter (Mugs, Mugsy, J. Fred) she affectionately poured out her flow of impressions, rife with Yiddishisms. She opposed the Vietnam War, hated Jimmy Carter ("That Georgia jerk. He really is a fake.") and struggled with and against her twin sister, "Popo," who became known as Dear Abby. The sisters' rivalry was played out in the media ("The Times Herald—I was on that paper for years but they played her column on the Editorial page and I was back with the truss ads and the pimple cream.") and in Landers' heart, mixing love, competition, irritation and pain. Toward her husband she was full of cozy, purring affection, and even the famous letter announcing their divorce has a kind of shade-darkened dignity and generosity. Squeezing life's juiciness, she advised: "Again, doll, enjoy life. When you're in love the whole world is Jewish—even when your husband ain't."

Lush is a cosmetics and bath store at 166 Newbury St. Call 617-375-5874 or go to www.lush.com.

Though fully clothed, the shoppers perusing the wares at Lush are clearly looking forward to heading home to a spicy bath. The store—one of the British retailer's four U.S. locations—is laid out like a vegetable market, with bath yummies displayed in wooden bins. Meringue-textured Bath Bombs, for instance, exude essential oils when placed beneath the faucet's waterfall. Bubble-creating items with names like Hot Toddy, Sex Bomb and Waving Not Drowning look like little biscuits and come in vibrant colors like lavender and lime. (See also Buffy the Backside Slayer and I Love Juicy.) Some bath additives are sparkly or include embedded flowers, thus increasing their gift potential. Big, serious chunks of soap are sold by the pound. Solidity is the order of the day for products that are ordinarily liquid, like shampoo and conditioner. Little tublets of moisturizer and hand creams—rife with vanilla pod, almond oil, rose petal infusion and honey—await a dab. The Brits are famous bathers, and the cheeky adverts here suggest possible aphrodisiac powers. That may be a stretch, but you'll at least end up with a sugary clean body.

YANKEE FOOD IS DANDY

A Boston institution since 1826, Durgin-Park remains a shrine of beef for locals and tourists alike

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

I first heard of Durgin-Park early in my childhood, growing up in East Hartford, Conn. My father, whose interest in food preceded and conditioned my own (he was not only an accomplished cook but catered weddings for friends and relatives) told me about a restaurant in Boston that would satisfy my carnivorous proclivities. Durgin-Park's roast prime rib, he advised, was so gargantuan that it could not be contained by the restaurant's dinner plates. Not only that, but beef at Durgin-Park was classically served rare, or as my mother termed it, "almost mooing." Indeed, for a long time Durgin-Park prominently displayed a sign stating, "We are not responsible for steaks ordered well done."

Durgin-Park may have abandoned its provocative and politically incorrect notice about well-done steaks—indeed, state law requires that menus contain warnings about undercooked meat. But the restaurant has not flinched from its commitment to quality beef, and to quantity—the prime rib still hangs off the plate as in days of yore.

An expansive restaurant seating more than 500 in several dining rooms in Faneuil Hall's North Market Building, this historic place—"established before you were born," boasts a sign over the door—serves most of its food on the second floor. There, from an open kitchen with well-weathered stainless steel ovens and counters, the bustling waitstaff transports food-laden trays to the far-flung corners of a sea of long, communal tables covered in red and white checkered tablecloths. The White Room, furthest from the stairs, to the right, strikes a contrast, with white tablecloths and copper wainscoting and paneling, an eclectic array of framed photographs, antique advertising posters, newspaper and magazine articles, and mirrors competing for wall space with coathooks. Ceiling fans turn slowly overhead, and windows in arched niches look out onto Quincy Market. Another flight up is a slightly upscale space, the Peter Faneuil Room, its smaller tables dressed in white tablecloths. Shiny stainless steel pitchers on all tables are kept well supplied with ice water, and cloth napkins are the order of the day.

Meals at Durgin-Park begin with a large slice of cornbread, baked on the premises, accompanied by a pat or two of butter (the restaurant's butter bill is said to range between $2,000 and $3,000 per week). The butter alleviated the slight dryness of the cornbread and accentuated its pleasant sweetness. Appetizers included the obligatory clam chowder ($3.95), one of only eight offerings listed in bold print as a house specialty. It lived up to its billing, thick with potatoes and clams but mercifully devoid of flour or cornstarch. The fish chowder ($2.95) ran a close second among the appetizers, with shredded fish and potatoes giving it substantial body, complemented by a full-flavored broth.

French fried onion rings ($2.95), on the other hand, were ghastly—heavy with doughy breading and flavorless—and mammoth in portion. Shrimp scampi ($9.95) almost merited their bold print, but the price, which by Boston restaurant standards was reasonable, seemed excessive compared with the value that other menu offerings delivered. In contrast to the prodigious portions of most Durgin-Park dishes, these five medium-large shrimp looked forlorn on the large gratin dish. Four of the five displayed exemplary texture—the fifth was a bit mealy—and all of them satisfied the taste buds, thanks to the garlicky butter and dusting of minced parsley.

While appetizers can be fine and good, the reason to come to Durgin-Park is for the main event. Here it did not disap point. The roast prime rib of beef, Durgi Cut ($24.95), was as glorious in its abun dance, richness and robust beef flavor a my father reported long ago. The evenin I ordered the roast prime rib, I was blesse with one of Durgin-Park's veteran wait resses, who have been described as brusqu bordering on rude. Neither of those adjec tives fit her: She was pleasant and upbea More important, her obvious experienc and influence in the kitchen served m well. I asked whether it was possible to ge an end cut of the prime rib that was at th same time rare. She rose to the challeng and returned with a magnificent slab, al most two inches thick, with an outsid layer of crusty, caramelized fat protectin the rare, succulent, tender interior. My re quest for a rare end cut must not hav been unprecedented, for she knew exactl what to look for and timed her attac carefully. My appetite dented by th chowder, all I could manage was to eat th meat closest to the bone, leaving the re for a doggie bag. Ever alert and responsiv my waitress prepared two bags: one wit the bone picked almost clean, expressl for my Labrador retriever, whom I ha mentioned, and the other, with the rar now boneless beef, to be savored for a least two lunches by the noncanine mem bers of my household.

Boston scrod ($14.95) is another hous specialty—it's offered broiled or bake with seasoned breadcrumbs. I selected th former and received a fine slab of fish, fir and flaky, only slightly flawed by too muc liquid in the bottom of the plate. Broile lamb chops ($24.95), on the other hand suffered no such shortcoming. Four hug chops, double thick, arrived rare as o dered, exquisitely tender and juicy. The size betokened lambs that were beyon adolescence, but since the flavor of matu lamb is something I savor, I considered it plus. Ground sirloin steak ($7.95) was juicy half-pound of good-quality, rare bee and while an inadequately hot grill faile to sear it sufficiently, its robust beef flav was beyond reproach.

In fancy steakhouses around the city an elsewhere, many steaks and chops com unadorned with garnishes, and these hav to be purchased separately at à la cart prices ranging from $5 on up. At Durgin-Park, all main courses, except pasta, came with a choice of two vegetables. Potatoes were available in the form of fresh, hot French fries, a welcome contrast to the dismal onion rings. Other vegetables included sweet, spicy butternut squash puree, crunchy cole slaw, boiled buttered cabbage, and al dente zucchini with red bell peppers, all delicious. Boston baked beans, the only one of Durgin-Park's side dishes that merited bold print as a house specialty, were sweet with molasses and savory with salt pork.

Durgin-Park offers a limited number of wines, including a very decent house cabernet sauvignon for $4, and an even better Hardy's Nottage Hill cabernet-shiraz from Australia for $5. Not only were these wines priced below most other Boston restaurants' wines by the glass, but the glasses were filled to the brim—not elegant, but certainly a welcome contrast to the skimpy wine pours that are all too common.

Desserts included a mammoth slice of Boston cream pie ($3.95), light vanilla cake alternating with thick layers of vanilla custard, with chocolate frosting and thin-sliced toasted almonds. House specialty desserts included Indian pudding ($3.25) and strawberry shortcake ($3.95), but being skeptical of strawberry shortcake in December, and recalling the Indian pudding as a heavy creation that might be too much after all that beef, I chose the coffee Jello ($1.50), made from slightly sweetened black coffee and accompanied by thick, moderately sweet whipped cream. Getting the cubes of shimmering Jello to stay on my spoon proved a challenge.

In these days of the Atkins diet, where well-marbled beef is considered almost therapeutic rather than lethal, Durgin-Park may generate a whole new constituency. The newcomers will have to get in line, though, behind the steady parade of loyal regulars and hungry tourists who have long been its principal patrons. Obviously, Durgin-Park's cornbread and French fries do not fit the Atkins protocol, but less carb-heavy sides like cole slaw, zucchini and cabbage do. Best of all, it's gratifying that medical science has restored this marvelous shrine of beef to respectability. For its steadfastness and refusal to knuckle under to culinary trendiness, Durgin-Park fully deserves its premier position among Boston eateries. iB

UpStairs with the seer...Re-Torch-ing...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Torch on Beacon Hill is cozier than ever.

Predicting the future in dining is a risky business, and never more so than when trends collide instead of collude. We've got slow-food ideals in a fast-food culture. We ponder the specter of mad cow disease in a city full of steakhouses. We want comfort food, luxurious treats and special meals designed to accommodate trendy diets. So what might be in store for 2004?

It's not all about the food, according to Deborah Hughes, co-proprietor of UpStairs on the Square. It's the experience of breaking bread and affirming connections. "People are so much more careful about who they eat with," she says.

As for upcoming menus, "I think people will be offering food that's attentive to special diets," Hughes predicts, "South Beach, Atkins." She also foresees "way less-fancy desserts" that are "evocative and familiar. Beautiful, simple, wonderful things, with less ego on the plate." (In case you're wondering, the stellar butterscotch pudding is still on the UpStairs dessert menu).

In short, according to Hughes, diners are seeking "close-to-the-earth pleasures...and a healthy dose of luxe."

SECOND COURSE

Light switches: After five years in business, Torch owners Evan and Candice Deluty decided to liven up their cozy Beacon Hill restaurant with major renovations, a menu overhaul, and special attention to pre- and post-theater diners. Italian dishes have been added to the formerly all-Parisian-inspired lineup. However, the likes of housemade potato gnocchi with artichoke, tomato and parmesan reggiano and pan-seared monkfish with butternut squash risotto and rock shrimp haven't knocked such favorites as chef Evan's salmon tartare off the menu. Candice has expanded the strictly French wine list to include offerings from California, Italy, Argentina and New Zealand, with many available by the glass. If you've got theater tickets, let the Delutys know, and you can count on getting to the show on time.

Social promotions: Smart restaurateurs are planning way, way ahead to attract diners. Les Zygomates has already scheduled Tuesday night wine tastings through the end of 2004. For a mere $25, you get a brief cooking demo from chef Ian Just, four or five hors d'oeuvres carefully paired with the wines, and commentary from sommelier Geoffrey Fallon. We can hardly wait till Dec. 21, which features "The Best of the Rest: Wines from Weird Places."

Don't care about mad cow? Not on the Atkins diet? Craving close-to-the-ground pleasures like BBQ and beer? Looking for a bargain, without resorting to tacky coupons or resigning yourself to a chain restaurant with down-market decor? Yes? For the remaining Wednesdays in January, you can snack on a $5 combo of BBQ ribs and Edison Light beer at Bomboa. Throughout the year, a new appetizer/drink combo will be featured each month and offered every Wednesday night. Tax, gratuity and frequent-flier miles not included. iB

Tastings: A Spin on Food

The Anthony Spinazzola Foundation Gala Festival of Food & Wine is the mother of all Boston food festivals. While the city's "Taste of..." events typically feature 30 or 40 restaurants proffering gourmet samples, the black-tie Spinazzola gala boasts a whopping 120 restaurants and 90 winemakers. Spinazzola, a much-loved Boston Globe food and wine writer who died in the mid 1980s, must have been quite a presence on the dining scene to have inspired this bash, where Bostonians will lay down $175 to nibble such delicacies as smoked bluefish rillette on brioche, lobster risotto and pork tacos with duck fried rice. The foundation, formed in 1992, offers grants to hunger relief agencies, programs for the homeless and culinary apprenticeships and scholarships. World Trade Center Boston, 200 Seaport Blvd., Boston (781-344-4413). 7:30 pm-12 am. $175.

CityScope: Monkeying Around

Many of us poor slobs are still reeling from being a bit too...enthusiastic on New Year's Eve, and the idea of attending another New Year's celebration is unthinkable. Fortunately, alcohol isn't the focus at the Chinese New Year celebrations that take place around the city starting on Jan. 23, the day after the official start of the Chinese New Year. The most notable, an all-day celebration in Chinatown on Jan. 25, ushers in the Year of the Monkey, Chinese year 4702, with performances and dances in the street. After the street celebrations, revelers can make their way to the evening festivities, a giant eight-course banquet at Empire Garden ($60), including Pan-Asian entertainment and dancing. Other restaurants are getting in on the New Year action: On Jan. 23, China Pearl is having a banquet ($25), and Peking Tom's is offering a three-course meal and Chinese lionhead dancing ($47.02). (Peking Tom's will also offer an expanded menu with special cocktails through Feb. 1.) The Children's Museum celebrates the New Year all day on the 25th with demonstrations of Chinese traditions and martial arts performances. Empire Garden, 690-698 Washington St., Boston (617-426-9492). China Pearl, 9 Tyler St., Boston (617-542-2574). Peking Tom's 25 Kingston St., Boston (617-482-6282). Children's Museum, 300 Congress St., Boston (617-426-8855).

Books & Poetry: Still Radical After All These Years

Not many octogenarians are still rabble-rousing. But radical historian and ex-BU professor Howard Zinn ha made a career out of promoting a controversial view of American history that takes into account the perspective of the "dispossessed" with books like A People's History of the United States. On Jan. 21, he gives a lecture at the First Parish Church on his new tome, Artist in Times of War, in which he talks about war, dissent and the potential of artists to create change. The next day, fellow historian Davis Joyce reads from his new biography of Zinn called Howard Zinn: A Radical American Vision (which includes an introduction by MIT linguist Noam Chomsky) at the BU Barnes & Noble. The reading is sure to be jam packed, especially since Zinn will be there, so you activist types better ge there early. First Parish, 3 Church St., Cambridge (617-661-1515). 7:30 pm. Free. Barnes & Noble at Boston University. 660 Beacon St., Boston (617-267-8484). http://bu.bkstore.com. 7 pm.

Tastings: Wine, Oh!

One of the speakers at this year's Boston Wine Expo, Wine for Women author Leslie Sbrocco, attempts to take the mystery out of wine tasting by comparing different grape varietals to women's clothing. For example, to distinguish between chardonnay and pinot gris, Sbrocco says you should picture throwing on a little black dress for a night out versus a pair of denim jeans. Pinot noir? Seductive satin. Zinfandel? Black leather pants. Rosé? Beachwear. Those who don't need a primer in wine (or fashion) can simply indulge in samples from more than 440 wineries from 12 different countries. World Trade Center, 200 Seaport Blvd., Boston (877-946-3976). www.wine-expos.com. Jan. 31 and Feb. 1. 1–5 pm. $60, $70 at the door. Sbrocco teaches Taste Wine Like a Pro: Learn the Secrets of the Art of Blind Tasting on Jan. 31, at 3:30 pm.

TUE./JAN. 27–SUN./FEB. 8.

Performing Arts: Here's to You, Mrs. Robinson

"Would you like me to seduce you?" The line made famous by Anne Bancroft in Mik Nichols' 1967 film, The Graduate, now belongs to Lorraine Bracco. Best known for h roles in Goodfellas and The Sopranos, Bracco has temporarily cut ties with the mafia and modesty (more on that later) to play sultry Mrs. Robinson in Terry Johnson's comedic play. Academy Award, Emmy and Golden Globe nominee Bracco is joined Tony Award nominee Jonathan C. Kaplan (as Benjamin) and All My Children alum Devon Sorvari (as Elaine) in the classic story of an older, married temptress who lure a naive young man into the sack. If an all-star cast and a racy May/December romanc don't pique your interest, maybe the promise of full frontal will. Yup, 53-year-old Bracco follows the lead of Broadway's first Mrs. Robinson (Kathleen Turner) and bar all. Thirteen nights on stage in the buff? That takes some serious stugots. Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston (617-931-2787). Tue.-Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 and 7:30 pm. $30-$72.

Life After Wartime

The Fog of War marches over The Statement

BY PAUL SHERMAN

The lingering moral residue of the Vietnam War turns out to be more interesting than that of World War II, at least as seen in a pair of new movies, Cambridge moviemaker Errol Morris' Vietnam War documentary The Fog of War and Norman Jewison's fictionalized The Statement, about the hunt for a Nazi collaborator. Of course, it's always been easier to separate the good guys from the bad in WWII, though even that distinction is never a given in either movie.

Errol Morris' documentary The Fog of War features former secretary of defense Robert McNamara.

The difficulty of deciding who's the hero and who's the villain is the dramatic undercurrent in The Fog of War, which Morris compiled from a series of extended interviews with former secretary of defense Robert McNamara. This whip-smart technocrat served under presidents Kennedy and Johnson and oversaw the expansion of the Vietnam War into the pit of quicksand it became. Nearly 30 years after leaving his post he offered a very qualified mea culpa, claiming he opposed the war's escalation and kept matters from getting even worse.

It would be easy to see The Fog of War as Morris' attempt to coax a fuller confession of wrongdoing out of McNamara, or at least make McNamara look bad. After all, Morris' last documentary was Mr. Death, in which he and his camera sat back as Fred A. Leuchter, a creepy designer of (creepier) execution devices, ruined his career by setting out to prove there were no gas chambers at Auschwitz. But McNamara is no crackpot, and you respect him, as Morris himself obviously does, for answering Morris' questions.

It's also obvious from the start that McNamara, now in his mid 80s and still sharp, isn't going to be tricked into saying anything he doesn't want to. If there's anything dubious about McNamara's life, the man is well aware of it. He spent the latter days of WWII analyzing the efficiency of U.S. firebombing of Japan so it could be improved—and it was improved, so much so that U.S. forces burned 100,000 Japanese civilians in one night during March 1945. "[General LeMay] and I were behaving as war criminals," McNamara says, without prodding from Morris.

The Fog of War places McNamara's Vietnam experience within the overall context of his WWII military experience and his postwar stint as a Ford executive. Ultimately, the notion of McNamara unburdening himself of Vietnam guilt becomes secondary to the movie's focus on war as a series of choices made by individuals, and the idea that it's naive to expect the "good guys" to be good. This acknowledgement of moral ambiguity makes the movie unusually contemporary. When McNamara explains the quagmire of Vietnam by saying, "we didn't know enough about the Vietnamese to empathize with them," the comment puts a chill in your spine in light of the current war in Iraq. (The Fog of War was filmed about two years ago.)

The Fog of War unfurls in the same style as First Person, Morris' inspired cable-TV series of interview-based short films, with McNamara addressing one camera head-on, other cameras capturing him at off-kilter angles, injected montages of archival footage, and music chiming in. (Frequent Morris collaborator Philip Glass composed the soundtrack.) The film also includes fascinating audiotapes of cabinet meetings during the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. It's meant to be a heady stew, and it works.

If The Fog of War is a fitting marriage of form and function, The Statement is an iffy fit from the start. It positions its 1990s-set Holocaust tale as a popcorn thriller, as two French investigators (Tilda Swinton, Jeremy Northam) hunt down a former Nazi collaborator (Michael Caine) who, it turns out, has been sheltered and financially supported by a secret society within the Catholic Church.

This movie wants to move beyond simple good guys and bad guys, too. The script would have the audience partially sympathize with the collaborator, but even though the church and political higher-ups who've sheltered him now fear exposure from his capture, he's not enough of a pawn to earn sympathy. (It's hard to sympathize with a character who has killed seven Jews from his own village.) Besides, the vagueness of the church's complicity with the Nazis in The Statement makes real evildoers come off like totally generic movie villains. With its cast of Brits as Frenchmen (including the late Alan Bates) and its listless, rambling action, The Statement just feels out of whack, in so many ways. iB

Bad Santa ★★★½
Finally, a Christmas movie about a degenerate cussing, sex-addicted, drunk degenerate. In a Sa suit. Billy Bob Thornton is an absolute hoot as department store St. Nick who, with his midget, costumed partner (Tony Cox), sets up shop ev December in a different city and a different st and then robs the store safe on Christmas Eve. T Santa's aversion to anything and everything bes drink and tail makes him an unrepentant poster for misanthropy, while director Terry Zwigoff (G World) again proves to be one of the movies' g guys by not wimping out with a soft, Elf-style e ing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Big Fish ★★★
Forget about the present-day drama between a b tery dying Southerner (Albert Finney) and his se estranged grown son (Billy Crudup) in Tim Burt latest. The real action is in the tall tales about dying man's earlier life. These sequences featur Ewan McGregor are the first thing anyone will member from this movie. Burton gives these sce an eye-popping heightened reality, while McG gor's lively performance might remind you of other optimistic dreamer from a Burton movi Johnny Depp's Ed Wood. With his performance swaggering Camelot-era man-about-town in D with Love and now this role, McGregor has impro bly shown himself to be a crackerjack portraye American gumption. The rest of the movie falt but McGregor's scenes are bull's-eyes. (At Bos Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Calendar Girls ★★
It's depressing that much of English moviemak has become a minstrel show of stiff upper lips plucky underdogs. In this comedy, a chapter of twee Women's Institute publishes a popular caler of nearly nude women. But the true story on wh the film is based gets shoehorned into the Full Mo formula of triumphant everyday heroes. Altho any movie with Helen Mirren and Julie Walter its stars deserves some respect, this one's too c and too flimsy. (At Boston Common, Ken Square and suburbs.)

The Company ★
Robert Altman's drama set within the Joffrey Ba of Chicago is perhaps the veteran director's w film. There's little attempt to develop the cha ters, conflict is almost nonexistent, and the da numbers look like a cross between Mummensch and a Fruit of the Loom commercial. Altho many of the company's real dancers play suppor roles, Barbara Turner's script offers no insight i this insular community. The characters, such as imperious artistic director (Malcolm McDowell second-tier dancer trying to get to the next le (Neve Campbell) and her cook boyfriend (Ja Franco), are one-dimensional at best. And Altr inserts most of the dance numbers in seemingly dom fashion, without context. (At Kendall Sq and Coolidge Corner.)

The Cooler ★★
As he often has, William H. Macy plays a guy ting the fuzzy end of life's stick in this Vegas c edy-drama. He's a sad sack whose luck is so bad his job is merely to turn up at the casino where works and cool down gamblers' hot streaks. I about to quit and, presumably, try to change luck in life, especially now that he's started a r tionship with a round-the-block casino wait (Maria Bello). That might have been an interes tale had writer-director Wayne Kramer stuck t Instead, the story brings in too many out forces—including the return of the cooler's tranged son (Shawn Hatosy) and the pressures casino manager (Alec Baldwin) is feeling to "r ernize"—that clutter the plot. The interesting h at the center just gets smothered by it all. (At C ley Place and Kendall Square.)

Girl with a Pearl Earring ★★
Based on Tracy Chevalier's novel, this film pu speculative backdrop tale to Johannes Verme 1660s painting. As director Peter Webber strive get the Dutch master's lighting and composition right, his poor characters walk around in a stiff, morless daze, and the story turns stilted in no ti The movie's Vermeer (Colin Firth) is a garden-v ety tortured artist, in this case tormented by bourgeois wife (Essie Davis) and mother-in (Judy Parfitt), who push him to paint more and more. His household's new maid (Scarlett Joh son) puts no such demands on him, and the start a secret friendship that leads to her posing the famous portrait. Although the relationships tween the sexes and between the classes can be teresting here, the central pair's sexual tension is so laden with pregnant pauses and symbolism (like Vermeer's penetrating piercing of the maid's ears) that this overripe art house melodrama is almost instant self-parody. (At Kendall Square.)

The House of Sand and Fog ★★

Local author Andre Dubus III's father wrote the story on which In the Bedroom was based. Now the younger Dubus has had a novel adapted, and you could call this similar film In the Three-Bedroom. Like the previous movie, it compounds tragedy upon tragedy. The first is when emotional wreck Kathy (Jennifer Connelly) loses her house when it is mistakenly seized for nonpayment of taxes. Before she can correct the mistake, the house goes up for auction and is grabbed by a down-and-out former Iranian colonel (Ben Kingsley) who wants to sell it to maintain his family's standard of living. The struggle between these two people dependent on the house is inevitably headed for more tragedy, but the plot takes a convoluted and not very involving path to get there, and is too dependent on an imprudent sheriff's deputy (Ron Eldard) who tries to help Kathy but repeatedly messes things up. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Japanese Story ★★

Nothing like a near-death experience to break the romantic ice. At least that's what this Australian romance would have you believe. The geologist (Toni Collette) and the married Japanese businessman (Gotaro Tsunashima) she's assigned to escort to remote mineral mines can't stand each other initially. Then they almost die when their rental car gets stuck in the desert, and once they get it moving it's not long before they're having a fling. The Brief Encounter–like story then goes for an emotional home run that it just can't pull off, because the depth of the relationship never quite convinces. (At Copley Place.)

The Last Samurai ★★

Dances with Wolves goes east in this 1870s tale of a cavalry officer (Tom Cruise) who's sent to Japan to help train the emperor's troops to fight off a rebellion by samurai opposed to Japan's modernization. When the officer, who's been disillusioned ever since witnessing Custer's brutal campaign against Native Americans, is taken prisoner by the samurai and carted back to their mountain camp, he sees that, like the Indians back home, they're not the savages the government claims they are. Director Ed Zwick (Glory, Courage Under Fire) again exhibits the social conscience that is his trademark, but his message is compromised by his casting of Cruise. Although the movie salutes community and unselfishness, it also expends most of its energy glorifying its star. Ultimately, it's as hypocritical as someone who says "Do what I say, not what I do." (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King ★★

Peter Jackson has once again given us an expansive spoof of bombastic, medieval fantasy adventures: the furrowed brows, the swords and sorcery, the creatures, the hair extensions. Oh, that's right, it's not supposed to be silly. Jackson is obviously an imaginative, capable director, but after three movies and seven hours, I still don't care a lick about anything that happens to any of these solemn, solemn people. The LOTR trilogy epitomizes the sort of movie that wins technical Academy Awards but that no one takes seriously. Yet for reasons I just can't understand, a lot of folks have taken these films seriously. (Come on, isn't Tolkien's attractive-human-heroes-versus-ugly-Orc-villains plot just a tad juvenile?). Maybe Jackson can go back to making interesting movies like Heavenly Creatures and Forgotten Silver now. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lost in Translation ★★★½

Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World ★★★

An intense, eye-popping opening battle and director Peter Weir's realistic storytelling help this naval epic sail over dull patches, gabby interludes and hohum subplots. The level of authenticity is so much higher than any mere piece of spectacle in this 1805 story of the crew of an English ship that is attacked by a French ship and then spends the rest of the movie tracking it to get revenge. Russell Crowe plays the battle-wise captain and Paul Bettany is the ship's inquisitive scientist, and though these friends' dialogues about the merits of science can't compare with the action sequences, Crowe especially breathes great life into his character. For once, the special effects serve the story in a big movie, and not the other way around. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Monster ★★

No matter how hard it tries, and no matter how much Charlize Theron transforms herself into less attractive, much rougher Aileen Wuornos—the prostitute whom Florida executed for killing seven men—this docudrama isn't nearly as sympathetic or as interesting as Aileen Wuornos: The Selling of a Serial Killer, Nick Broomfield's decade-old documentary. In the docudrama, Wuornos is a much-abused woman who decides to try her luck with women after she meets a younger lesbian (Christina Ricci). But with no other way to make money, she keeps hooking, and after a john gets violent, she kills him in self-defense. Then she continues to kill. Although you feel her rage, the movie's Wuornos is a little too dumb to sympathize with (she keeps riding around in her victims' cars), and Theron fails to provide the spark that might make her more fascinating than stupid. The movie also puts all its emotional eggs in the basket of the doomed lesbian affair—which fails to be the riveting tragedy writer-director Patty Jenkins wants it to be. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Paycheck ★★

It would have been great to have a fun action-thriller nestled between this season's literary-minded Oscar seekers and the kids' stuff. Too bad this ain't it. Like Minority Report, John Woo's adaptation of a Philip K. Dick short story is a Hitchcock-like accused-man-on-the-run story turned futuristic. Ben Affleck plays an engineer who's had three years of his memory erased after working on a secret project, but who left himself an envelope of seemingly everyday items that he knew he could use to get himself out of his predicament. That's a cool premise, but it gets so convoluted that its credibility soon plummets. (How did he just happen to have that fortune-cookie fortune with the important message and important number preprinted on it?) (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Peter Pan ★★

Unless you're 10 years old, there's not much chance you'll be overly enchanted by the latest film version of J.M. Barrie's tale of Victorian lass Wendy (Rachel Hurd-Wood), flying Peter (Jeremy Sumpter), Captain Hook (Jason Isaacs) and the Lost Boys. This one is heavy on visual effects and crafting, and it breaks tradition by actually casting a boy as Peter, so the puppy love between him and Wendy is less pretend than usual. But you keep waiting for something distinctive to spill from this version directed by P.J. Hogan (Muriel's Wedding, My Best Friend's Wedding), and it never quite does. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Shattered Glass ★★★

The story of Stephen Glass, the hotshot New Republic reporter who turned out to have faked most of his articles, becomes a fascinating drama that avoids the usual stodginess of docudramas. Instead of showing us the hows and whys of Glass' fakery—does anyone really know that besides Glass himself?—the movie presents Glass (Hayden Christensen) as an eager-to-please go-getter who appears taken in by his own veneer of guilelessness (and who also appears to be the best co-worker anyone could have). That self-deception may be the biggest and most interesting deceit in the movie, which also touches upon entertainment's dangerous, seductive power over journalism. The strong supporting cast includes Peter Saarsgard, Chloe Sevigny, Hank Azaria and Melanie Lynskey. (At Kendall Square and Copley Place.)

Stuck on You ★★★

Anyone who branded the Farrelly Brothers "gross-out kings" without seeing the sweetness in their comedies (There's Something About Mary, Kingpin) might finally get the point this time. Their endearing story of two conjoined twins (Matt Damon, Greg Kinnear) who move from Martha's Vineyard to Hollywood so one can pursue an acting career is amusing and good-natured, with winning performances from its two leads and, as variations of themselves, Cher and Meryl Streep. The visual gimmick of having conjoined twins works much better than the problematic gimmickry of the brothers' Shallow Hal, though their penchant for casting their New England buddies in supporting parts might make you wonder why half of Hollywood has a Boston accent. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Cassandra Wilson embraces her roots and extends the jazz vocabulary

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Cassandra Wilson began the New Year in a familiar place—her Mississippi hometown of Jackson, where she spends the holidays with family and has recorded her most recent CDs.

Cassandra Wilson's daring cover songs often garner acclaim from the original artists. Her latest CD, Glamoured, is a mix of covers and originals.

"It's a wonderful time to gather with old friends and bring the musicians who I generally work with in New York down to Mississippi, to get them out of their usual context and see how they react to the setting," says the dusky-voiced jazz chanteuse, who even recorded 2002's Belly of the Sun in a train depot. "It's just a much more relaxed atmosphere. In New York, there's so much more that grabs your attention."

Wilson has grabbed her share of attention in New York over her past decade. Starting with 1993's Blue Light 'Til Dawn, her CDs have consistently charmed critics and fans alike with their languid, sensual mix of daring covers and originals. She won a Grammy for Best Jazz Vocal for 1996's New Moon Daughter and was called "America's Best Singer" by Time magazine in 2001.

Her list of admirers includes storied musical artists as well. "Bono of U2 wrote me a wonderful note for covering 'Love is Blindness,'" says Wilson, who tackled Willie Nelson's "Crazy" and Bob Dylan's "Lay Lady Lay" for her latest CD, Glamoured. "I've had wonderful conversations with [Dylan]. Van Morrison was great when I did 'Tupelo Honey,' and Joni Mitchell reached out [regarding Wilson's cover of 'Black Crow'] and we had a really great meeting."

"When I approach a song, it's definitely from a jazz perspective," says Wilson, who plays Berklee Feb. 7. "I like making covers my own. As long as it's seamless, there's nothing wrong with mixing it up.We interpret the popular songbook, and it's no different than what [jazz] singers have been doing all along. I reach for material from my time, my coming of age, from what's happening now. I hope it extends the vocabulary."

"I like to describe the process as a song picking me rather than the other way around," she adds. "If [a song] really resonates for you, then find a way to interpret it that makes sense for you."

Sometimes that means a song that Wilson remembers from her youth is transformed in her folk and blues–shaded approach. But Glamoured (a Gaelic word meaning to be whisked away) includes one of her more faithful covers in a vocal-bass duet of "Throw It Away," a ballad by jazz veteran Abbey Lincoln, who—along with Mitchell, Billie Holiday and Nina Simone—stands among Wilson's key influences.

"[She's] a major influence, not just in her style or musicianship, but what she stands for, how she deals with her group, how she is a leader, how she incorporates her life inside of her songs and how she constantly writes," Wilson says of Lincoln, who gave her blessing to the cover and provided words for a third verse. "I really enjoy writing music and want to continue to do that. And it's not something that jazz vocalists are encouraged to do, quite frankly."

"'Throw It Away' has helped me the last couple of years to deal with impermanence and movement," adds Wilson, 48. "I was going through a divorce, and moving out of our home that I'd been in for about 14 years, and that song helped me to go through all the clutter in my life."

Not that Wilson was seduced by the simplicity of life back in Mississippi while recording Glamoured. Halfway through the sessions, she sought new creative textures with Italian jazz guitarist-producer Fabrizio Sotti back in New York.

"When you're going through changes in life, it's often reflected in the music, and there were things I wanted to include, to experiment," she says. "Fabrizio has spent a lot of time in the hip-hop world and brings [those] production values to the table."

"There are a couple of tunes that are an indication of a more energetic, rhythmically intense approach," Wilson says, citing the original composition "I Want More." "There are two rhythmic strains that are happening, like a double-Dutch jump rope, going into that song. That's very much a part of jazz too, where everything is not what it seems to be. It's very complex, with layers of rhythm."

Those rhythms should be in fine hands when Wilson plays at Berklee with drummer Terri Lyne Carrington (who cowrote "I Want More" with Wilson and Sotti) and percussionist Jeffrey Haynes, plus guitarist Brandon Ross, bassist Reginald Veal and harmonica player Gregoire Maret.

And if Wilson doesn't sell as many CDs as Diana Krall or Norah Jones, it doesn't seem to bother her. "Everybody has their own path," Wilson says. "I represent something that perhaps will take Middle America a lot longer to get into." iB

Sparks at the B.B.G.

You were the handsome bartender with clear blue eyes and dark brown hair. Our eyes met when you served me a glass of wine on a busy Sunday night. I felt as though we shared a moment, as if time had stopped just for us. I haven't experienced that type of unspoken connection in quite some time. I was the tall, blond athletic type wearing a dark blue business suit. I don't know if you remember me, but I can't get you out of my mind. I write this hoping that you, too, are gay. If not... take this as a sincere form of flattery. You light up the bar.

New Year's Eve Max

"Just Max" from Somerville: It was New Year's Eve at La Boom. I had no expectations for the night except to dance and break a bad-luck curse that follows me every New Year's Eve. Then I met you, a young handsome Portuguese man with longish light brown hair and a goatee and wearing a white shirt and a nice smile. We danced for hours like we were the only ones on the dance floor. At the end of the night you asked how you would find me and then your brother handed me his cell phone. I put my number in the phone in haste and left you too fast to go with my friend who was leaving. I found out when I got home that I put my number in incorrectly. I wish I could go back to those moments and say goodbye differently. Even if we were not to meet again I wish I had kissed you goodbye and thanked you for making my night so special. I am now the one asking the question: How do I find you?

A Holiday Secret Just for You, Neighbor

I think you are so sexy you scare me! Scarier, you're also funny, fun, playful, good to animals and you might even be nice. But you are Mr. Mystery, and that's scary to me! I know all about your dog and why I have had fun chats with you. But I don't even know what you do! For work, for fun, for family... (Are you from Jupiter, or further off? Is that why a landing strip has been built by our building?) Ah, well, you have a girlfriend now. Which is great, congrats. I just wanted to be friends and who knows. That should still be possible...but how? A hint, maybe? You live right next to me!

—Your neighbor

Your Sweet Smile

I was riding the D Line Train inbound on Dec. 13 at around 8pm. You got on at Reservoir. The T was super crowded with all the young people going out, but I noticed you through the crowd. You were the blond girl standing in the stairwell, facing me. I was the brunette girl wearing a black jacket, sitting in the forward-facing seat closest to you. You were wearing a striped scarf or sweater, and even though it was cold out, you were showing your stomach. I think you had a Walkman on, and your bag had buttons or patches on it. You reminded me of Dido or Jewel for some reason. (Sorry for the trite comparison.) You seemed off in your own world for the most part, like I was, but then you looked at me and smiled the sweetest smile twice. I still don't know if you were just being friendly or if you can like girls like that. So why do I write? Maybe it's that a boy just broke my heart and I was glad that in those few seconds you made me forget. Maybe it's that I am in girl withdrawal and found myself wondering how you kiss. Maybe it was one of those times when it's a relief that someone else can find the same solitude in the crowd. Or maybe it's just that it's rare when someone beautiful smiles at you for no apparent reason. But whatever it was, I couldn't stop thinking about you. I wondered what you were listening to on your Walkman, where you were going, and what you ate for breakfast that morning. Even if you don't "go that way," you could still tell me all about the last boy who broke your heart, and I'd be glad to listen. And if you can go that way, maybe I'd find out what's behind your secret smile. If not, just know that you made me feel better in those briefest moments before the crowd overtook us and you made your exit. So I want to thank you.

Fellow Distraught Retailer (from the Dec. 17 Issue)

I feel your pain when dealing with less-than-socially-adept customers. In fact, I wrote a song about it called "The Horrors of Retail." Contact me via my band's Web site and I'll sing it to you. And have a peaceful retail season.

Hong Kong, Saturday Nite, Dec 20

Your name is Philip, you live in Jamaica Plain and your birthday is Oct. 21. I know this because you let me look at your license as proof for your name. I was the birthday girl wearing the black shirt partying hard with a bunch of my friends. You got me a Cape Codder. There was definitely a connection between us. We went outside to smoke even though we're both trying to quit. I was shivering and you gave me your black leather jacket to keep warm. You were a complete gentleman and it breaks my heart I took off in the manner I did without asking for a number or e-mail. We owe each other a dance. I'd love to see you again. Get in touch! Or who knows, maybe we'll run into each other again at the Hong Kong. Until then, here's my e-mail.

Victoria at Starbucks

You were studying at Starbucks on Harvard Ave. for your finals in occupational therapy. I was studying pharmacology. I sat down next to you and you said I could bother you any time. So here I am bothering you. You said you cook Mexican food and I would love to try some sometime.

December 29, Three Cents for Coffee

We were in Torrefazione, late on a Monday morning. You were in gray, with the only sexy rat tail I've ever seen. You gave me three cents so that I'd have exact change for my coffee. I was too shy to say anything but thanks. I think you might even work nearby. Give me the chance to thank you properly—or at least buy you a coffee. I'll bring the change.

Sonsie New Year's Eve

You were the dark-haired woman (beautiful and tastefully dressed) with the blond girlfriend and her outrageously under-clad pal and husband at the bar. I was the tall guy drinking bourbon trying to look comfortable in difficult territory and probably staring at you, observing no date to help you bring in the New Year. I wanted to start up a conversation, but nothing much good comes from meeting in a bar. Perhaps the dignified person inside would be willing to do it over coffee? Write me—it could be the start of a beautiful friendship and/or the next big thing of 2004.

Coffee for Two?

It was the morning of Jan. 4 at the Dunkin' Donuts on Mason Street in Salem. You wore a silver ring on your right hand. I wore the look of sleep all about me—from the hair that wasn't brushed to the slippers on my feet. Your name is Dave. You offered me a ride, but I declined, for fear that you might get close enough to notice that my hair wasn't the only thing that wasn't brushed. Let's get together for some coffee when both my hair and teeth are sparkling clean! E-mail me.

JANUARY 21 – FEBRUARY 3, 2004 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

AQUARIUS JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

You'll receive encouragement and support from a neighbor, a distant relative, a former schoolmate or a casual acquaintance who appreciates what you're selling, be it a product, a concept or, more likely, yourself. While the sun is in Aquarius, you can't help but project the humanitarian concerns and progressive attitudes the rest of us relate to and rely on. Launch your latest project with the new moon on the 21st; by Groundhog Day, when the sun joins idealistic Neptune, you may discover that you already have a devoted fan base.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

If you're thinking about redirecting your career path or have recently done so, now would be a good time to make a bold financial move. While courageous Mars is in your Aries money house, why not strike out for greater independence? By the time the sun gets to Aries in April, you could enjoy the first rewards of the action you take this week. If a higher income isn't a goal, simply lay back and, while Venus is still in your sign, let the rest of us pay homage to your artistry, good taste and beautiful soul.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Pushing your weight around? The powerful connection between your single-minded Mars ruler—in your sign, but only until Groundhog Day—and passionate Pluto can make you quite irresistible, but somewhat overwhelming. If that's the case, try a gentler, less insistent approach. Since it follows that "to the victor belong the spoils," who wants those spoils to be spoilsports? Use the new moon energy on the 21st to inaugurate another phase of your long-range career plan; then you can net more money next month.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Get serious. It's not every day, week or month that your pleasure-loving Venus ruler forms a constructive relationship with realistic Saturn. Because the year of the Monkey begins on such a practical, productive note, you can significantly improve your financial situation and career opportunities before the Rooster crows next year. Your first test comes as the month ends, when Venus confronts generous Jupiter in your house of romance, risk and recreation. Will you spend wisely or go for broke? Either way, play the lottery.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Shop around for the most useful object you think you need because you won't be this practical again for many moons. Once the airy Aquarius new moon introduces a fresh approach to traditional ways of doing things, you're likely to become enamored with a novel idea that you can see to its conclusion. Meanwhile, the urge to spend lots more money on the house or a family matter won't abate until acquisitive Venus and expensive Jupiter quit egging each other on. You might become entangled in this contest until the Super Bowl is history.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Another new moon, another reason for the Moon Child to start something new. But first, try making some whoopee! While affectionate Venus and restrictive Saturn form a favorable trine, you may actually feel good about the limitations the gods have imposed on your sex life. Venus in water sign–friendly Pisces can come up with other pleasurable opportunities, particularly mutually profitable ones. So before you get swept away by the innovative Aquarius lunar vibe, take another look at your current relationships and their positive effects.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Read for Aries. You, the preferred object of desire, might have to withstand a horny Ram's prolonged attack. But after the new moon kicks in, Leos born in July could feel obliged to reconnect and confess to their partners. August birthdays may discover something unusually interesting or artistic about their current gig and be inspired to work as hard as they play. While your sun ruler is in Aquarius, the sign of your cosmic complement, every interaction with a significant other can be much more meaningful than you think.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Remind yourself that Valentine's Day falls during Aquarius, and that the dawning of the Aquarius new moon in your house of romance can lead to something/someone special. Keep an eye out for prospects for true love, especially after Luna enters Pisces on the 23rd. A Virgo sun and a Pisces moon are a match made in heaven. Another chance at happiness pops up when enthusiastic Jupiter in Virgo and loving Venus align on the 29th. Mark the date: That's also when your Mercury ruler receives Jupiter's blessing.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

More stuff may be going on than you can handle. There's that aggressive partner, Mars, in your Aries marriage house, aligning with a nosy neighbor. There's your Venus ruler advocating that you head for a semblance of stability, but quite a lot more responsibility, with someone who is overseas or in academia. Plus there's the Aquarius new moon promising that something new, and infinitely more interesting, is about to sprout from under the family tree. Before the month is out, you'll have a jealous fit and a reason to spend like a sailor.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

You'll be your persuasive and sexy beast best while your co-ruling planets, Mars and Pluto, perfect their supportive trine this week. Besides the goodies you'll get without half trying, this pairing can bring a lot more money from the work you usually do, as well as from something you do purely on your own. The more adventurous or innovative, the better. The future-oriented Aquarius new moon is bound to bring a household or family matter to the fore, or, if you were born in November, an issue the entire neighborhood can relate to.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

A pastime you can be passionate about, a passionate love affair, a romantic adventure—any one or all three can follow from the positive energy flowing from courageous Mars to regenerative Pluto in your sign. If ever there was a fortuitous time to make a change, now would be it. Although you may get a glimpse of an either/or predicament facing you when affectionate Venus opposes your all-encompassing Jupiter ruler next week, push won't come to shove until the Pisces sun confronts Jupiter in early March.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

You might get into an argument with a co-worker or an authority figure when Mercury opposes Saturn, but since lovely and loving Venus is favoring your ruling planet at the same time, who cares? The rewards the goddess bestows on you now can be materialistic as well as romantic, and of the finest quality. Entertain constructive thoughts and envision your heart's desires, so when the Aquarius new moon brings fresh, inventive energy onto the scene, you'll be in a proper, i.e., positive, frame of mind.

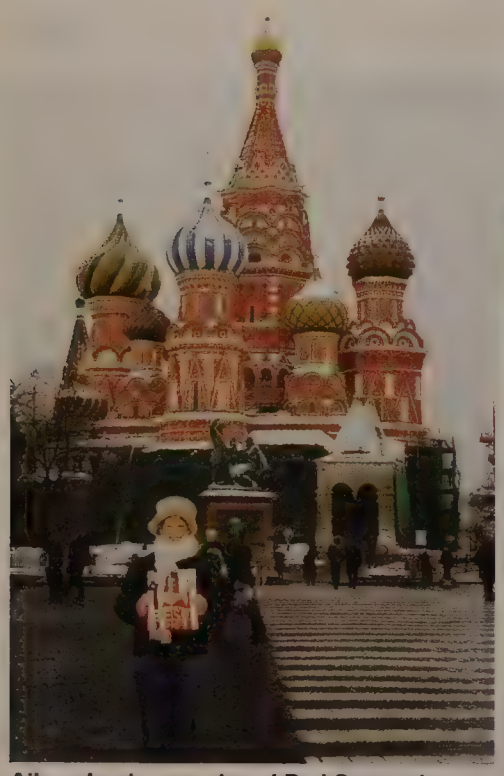
UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP



Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Abraham Lincoln "presenter" George Cheevers hangs out at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C. Look out, it's John Wilkes Booth! Sorry. We bet he gets that a lot.

Jen Goldstein, Dana Kelley, Liz Shanley and Kim Humby confirm that what happens in Vegas stays in Vegas. In that vein, we sincerely hope that Celine Dion keeps happening in Vegas.

Aileen Jamieson enjoyed Red Square in Moscow until she was shaken down for her IMPROPER by the Russian mafia.

Faraz Ali and Carsten Hilker stand atop a Mayan pyramid in Tikal, Guatemala. This location was used as a spaceship takeoff site in Return of the Jedi. At least that's what we're told. What do we look like, Trekkie geeks? Whoa, settle down, Captain Kirk.

Fresh gov. of PA Edward Rendell can finish this verse: "In West Philadelphia born and raised..." Try to get that out of your head.

IMPROPER BOUNTY

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS...

For many of the city's power elite, the Bristol Lounge at the Four Seasons is the default setting when it comes time to pick a place to have drinks, meet for a night on the town or grab a low-key but civilized bite to eat. It's not surprising, then, that 800 of them turned out for a party to mark the Bristol's temporary closing, and the questions on everyone's mind seemed to be what the renovations would look like and what the hell were they supposed to do until March, when it's scheduled to reopen?

Shoulder-to-shoulder in a bar that usually has plenty of breathing room were such prominent types as Hizzonah Tom Menino and his wife, the lovely Angela; the hotel's affable GM, Tom Gurtner, and his wife, Nui; bluesman and rock legend Peter Wolf; kabuki socialite Marilyn Riseman; philanthropic party pair Joel and Randi Cutler; marketing maven Irma Mann; newspaper publisher Jeff Coakley; deal-maker Kenneth Novack with his wife, Marianne, and daughter, Liz; notorious South End reprobate Bolton "Bo" Harris; theatrical producer Temple Gill and her arts-patron husband, Christopher Yens; former ambassador to Tanzania Charles Stith and his wife, Dr. Deborah Prothrow-Stith (who are off to Johannesburg at the end of the month to celebrate her birthday); newly engaged man-about-town Jim Tye (who was off to Brazil for some R&R); and one man who returned from tipping the men's room attendant and declared, "I now have the cleanest hands in the world, and it only cost me two dollars."

The overflow crowd descended on the wait staff coming from the kitchen like a swarm of well-dressed locusts, while servers with trays of drinks tried valiantly to ease the crush at the bars. Nevertheless, pretty much everyone seemed to enjoy themselves, as evidenced by the fact that the party went on well into the evening, and a few stragglers stayed until it was almost time for the workmen to arrive.

Meanwhile, the first truly groovy party of 2004 was the VIP opening of L, the new café on the ground floor of Louis. The party spilled out of the restaurant and into the store, which has expanded from carrying only cutting-edge clothing to include high-end housewares. A DJ spun ambient lounge music from a CD bar in the middle of the room, while an eclectic assortment of recognizable faces sipped sparkling wine and socialized amid shelves laden with lavish coffee table books, gourmet munchies and expensive crockery.

Present and accounted for: fashionista Denise Hajjar; Kennedy School of Government honcha Kathy McLaughlin; Tunisian rapscallion Taher Bouzayen; investment scamp Rob White; ubiquitous hipster Santo Russo; TV producer Lisa Pierpont and her husband, Alex; newlyweds Josh Ribner and Amy Masters; suspiciously tanned design avatar Rick Garofalo of Repertoire; Back Bay bright young things Rachael and Andy Goldfarb; celebrity chef Paul O'Connell of Chez Henri; the extremely pregnant Wendy Pierce; sybaritic fun couple Jake and Cynthia Katz; and one woman who said, "Can you believe I'm in Louis with a plastic barrette in my hair? At least it's not a scrunchy."

In addition to tasty morsels from the hip new eatery's menu, there was a dessert buffet with hypodermic syringes for guests to inject their choice of filling into miniature doughnuts. One of the only negative comments overheard all evening was when someone complained, "This is a deceptively small glass," to which a friend replied, "Well you're a deceptively big drinker." IB

IN MEMORIAM...

During the holidays, Boston lost a precious gem, Barbara Dorfman, who died unexpectedly a few days before Christmas. With her husband, Sumner, she operated the jewelry store on Newbury Street that bears their name. For decades, she dealt in the rarest of the rare—from diamonds as big as the Ritz-Carlton (across the street), to South Sea pearls the size of goose eggs and wristwatches so exquisitely engineered and crafted that they actually warranted a six-digit price tag.

Despite a rarefied clientele ranging from royalty to rock stars, but consisting almost entirely of the very rich, Dorfman remained approachable and down-to-earth, with a casual, easygoing charm leavened by a healthy sense of humor. "You know diamonds shrink," she once told me with a straight face. "People buy what they think is a huge ring, and before you know it, they're back, looking for something bigger."

On a first name basis with seemingly everyone in the Back Bay, Dorfman was as friendly with the waiters at her favorite restaurants as she was with the high rollers who were her customers. On social occasions and at cultural events, she was exquisitely turned out, usually in quietly chic, Upper East Side head-to-toe black and often sporting some eye-popping bauble she borrowed from the store. A devoted wife and mother, dutiful sister, and doting friend—in a cubic zirconia world, she was a D-flawless diamond.

TYING THE KNOT

With six pages of bridal fashion, and feature stories devoted to topics like coping with wedding-planning nightmares, our annual bridal issue is a marriage of the pretty and the practical.

Along with pre-wedding tips for brides on managing their slacking groom and keeping the peace with their future mother-in-law, this issue has suggestions for bridesmaids and groomsmen gifts as well as a guide to nearby inns with honeymoon potential. (Many couples are opting for short, local "mini-moons" immediately after the wedding and a bigger trip later on.)

Focusing on the quest for the perfect dress, recently married Julie Suratt turns in a firsthand account of the mayhem and deep bargains that rule at the semi-annual Filene's Basement Bridal Gown Sale (the next one's Feb. 20).

Even if you aren't one of those getting down on one knee this Valentine's Day or flashing a brand new rock, there's a must-read in these pages for you: etiquette tips for wedding guests. After all, everyone attends a wedding sooner or later, and wouldn't brides everywhere be happier if we all got a clue about the guest gaffes that drive them crazy? "Don't wear white" is just the beginning.

Unmarrieds may also want to know that the party celebrating the Improper's recently published bachelor/bachelorette issue has been set for Feb. 18, from 7 to 10 pm, at Caprice (275 Tremont St.). Come meet other singles and hear one of this year's bachelors, Adam Ezra, perform with his band.

IT'S RAINING MEN... OR AT LEAST DRIZZLING

I just picked up the latest issue (Bachelors and Bachelorettes, Jan. 21), and your cover speaks loudly. I think it's a very accurate depiction of the Boston singles scene: three single men for every five single women!

Would it be possible to order a laminated copy of the IMPROPER's photograph of bachelor Mike? I want to obsess over it for a few hours each day before stalking him.

Oh, wait. Peter is the gay bachelor. Damn.

CHALK IT UP TO POISON

It's comforting to know that someone in this city shares my frustration with minivans, Hallmark stores and many other things (Ezra, Jan. 7). As far as Ezra's ant problem goes, I suggest taking a trip to Chinatown and purchasing some "Miraculous Insecticide Chalk" (I'm not sure it's legal, but I'm pretty sure they still sell it). When I lived in Los Angeles I experienced a terrible ant invasion, and the chalk fixed the problem immediately. The chalk costs only a dollar or two, so if for some reason Ezra's ants are more resilient than the West Coast breed, he won't be out of pocket for too much.

CHOP SHOP

It isn't often that you see the words "lard," "offal," "wieners" and "tongue" inscribed on the windows outside a bar. Nor do you generally find links of sweet Italian sausage, skinned chickens and sides of beef dangling within view of diners sipping 1999 Chateau Vieux Robin Bordeaux and nibbling on olives and honeyed figs. Maybe in Madrid—where in some bars, whole smoked hams, complete with cloven toes, swing overhead—but Boston?

Judging by the crowds of men and women pouring in and out of the Butcher Shop every night, however, Boston is ready for the new venture from No. 9 Park wunderkind Barbara Lynch.

Lynch has found a winning formula—part full-service butchery, part charcuterie and wine bar. What's particularly impressive is that the Butcher Shop opened in the South End just seven weeks after B&G Oysters Ltd., the other half of Lynch's project with business partner Garrett Harker (the "G" of B & G), and just three months before Lynch is due to give birth to her first child.

Chef/owner/expectant mom Barbara Lynch

If it's hard to imagine how a place that carves up sides of beef during the day could attract the nighttime fine-dining crowd, rest assured that the place looks and feels more like a bistro than a butcher shop (although a glass refrigerator case in the back displays ground pork, skirt steak and duck rillettes). There's a long, black soapstone bar and floor-to-ceiling windows, and tables are set with elegant wine glasses and china. A huge wooden butcher-block table—swathed in freshly torn butcher paper—becomes a convenient leaning post for minglers in the evening (yes, it's frequently standing room only). But that doesn't mean you can't order the salumi plate or foie gras terrine with figs and brioche toast as you survey the crowd. It's the hippest you'll feel in a long time. 552 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-4800). —Erin Hagedorn and Julie Suratt sports

Though this issue of the IMPROPER hits newsboxes just after the Super Bowl, we have to go to press before we know the big game's outcome. We've therefore taken the liberty of preparing two Super Bowl write-ups, one win, one lose. Please read whichever one is appropriate:

DOWN PAT

Back to City Hall Plaza?

The Patriots showed they've got the Super Bowl routine figured out when they nailed down their second NFL championship with a 20–7 victory over the Carolina Panthers. True to their strategy all season, the Pats shut down Panthers running back Stephen Davis (51 yards on 20 carries) and managed enough offense to get the job done, scoring on a Brady touchdown pass to Troy Brown, a Eugene Wilson interception (returned for the TD) and two field goals (53 and 49 yards) from Adam Vinatieri. After the game, Patriots players and coaches celebrated, albeit cautiously. "Just because we haven't lost a game in four months and are legitimately one of the great teams in the history of the NFL doesn't mean we're going to get all crazy," said quarterback Tom Brady. "In fact, coach has practice scheduled tomorrow. The preseason is right around the corner. We can't rest on our laurels." When asked for his reaction to the win, coach Bill Belichick replied, "I will not be satisfied until I can travel back in time and vanquish my nemeses, the 1972 Dolphins." Meanwhile, a drunken mob tore down the remaining sections of the Central Artery, which city officials had shrewdly labeled "Goalposts."

PATS DOWNED

The Patriots' miraculous streak came to an end Sunday when the Panthers pulled off a stunning upset to claim their first NFL championship. It figures. We should've known this couldn't last. What were we thinking? We knew we shouldn't have washed our lucky Pat the Patriot jersey, but we did it anyway. Around the city, dejected fans reprised the scene after the seventh game of last year's ALCS by staggering around and silently mouthing the word "Why?" At least Carolina's six touchdowns meant that savvy bettors covered the 38-point over/under, despite the Patriots' solitary field goal. After the game, an angry Bill Belichick tore off his signature fleece headband and declared, "I knew I should've instituted an eight o'clock curfew. Everyone to bed. NOW!" —Ezra Dyer inner view

LOVE OVER LUNCH

Valentine's Day is the double-edged sword of holidays, warming the hearts of happy couples and leaving the rest of us lonely and cynical. Before you make "Down with love" your personal mantra and hole up with a fifth of vodka or a gallon of Ben & Jerry's, consider more proactive alternatives. LunchDates founder Steve Penner has been solving dating dilemmas for single Bostonians for more than two decades with his lunch-hour match-making service. Here, he chats about singledom in Boston and the best ways to escape the lonely hearts club.

IB: Would you say there are more single men or single women in Boston?

SP: Women think there aren't enough single men, and men think there aren't enough single women. There tend to be more single men than women in their 20s. In the 30s, it's about even, and in the 40s, there are more women than men. Overall, there are a lot more singles out there than 30 years ago. An old maid used to be someone who was 25 and never married. Now a lot of women wouldn't consider getting married at 25.

IB: What's the biggest complaint you get from women about meeting men in Boston?

SP: Either that men don't go out enough, or that the men are too short.

IB: From men?

SP: That women are too heavy.

IB: Who are the hardest people to match?

SP: Heavy smokers, men who are short and women who are overweight.

IB: Do you think opposites attract?

SP: No. I think people look for people who are similar to themselves—[especially] those in their 20s. They aren't like the older generations—they're more [self-sufficient]. Twenty years ago, a lot of women looked for men to take care of them and be their breadwinner. Nowadays women are breadwinners and are looking for men like themselves.

IB: Are there certain foods you shouldn't order on a LunchDate?

SP: I think men are a little tired of women always ordering salads, but, then again, men want women who are slender. Actually, the only complaint we get in that area is that the other person drank too much.

IB: How about some suggestions for things singles can do on Valentine's Day?

SP: Go where the opposite sex is. Bookstores are good places to meet women because women tend to read more than men. And for both sexes, especially in this election year, volunteering at political campaigns is a great place to meet people. [In general] Boston is a difficult place to meet someone. A lot of my clients say, "Back in Dallas or Chicago, I had no problem meeting people." Here, you've got to go to singles things or do personal ads.

BEER GOGGLING...HAIL REGINA

Foggy What?... Relive your spring break glory days year-round at the Foggy Goggle. The Boylston Street bar plans to open Feb. 5 in Dad's old digs, and the new owners have left no trace of the former diner. A Bourbon Street–style deck and a Hawaiian hula hut provide a change in atmosphere from Dad's leather banquettes and chrome fixtures, and tropical libations like Swamp Water and Foggy Punch are the specialty. House rules include "If you don't know how to have fun, stay home," and they sound pretty serious about it. 911 Boylston St. Boston (617-267-8038).

Alotta Regina... It's more than a little frustrating for those of us who are Pizzeria Regina addicts to find a line out the door every time we head to the North End—even in sub-zero temperatures. But there will soon be two more locations to choose from, as the beloved dough-slingers recently announced plans to open two new pizzerias this spring—one in the Prudential Center and the other at South Station. The new restaurants will feature expanded menus and bring the total number of Reginas nationwide to 14.

Sweet Sensations... Prepare for a sugar rush. Bradley Brown, former executive pastry chef at La Bettola, the Garden of Eden and Sonsie, and his wife, Carrie, are set to open the Blue Frog Bakery in Jamaica Plain in early March. Handmade croissants, scones, muffins, raspberry squares, chocolate chip cookies and brownies will be on the menu along with lighter fare like soups and sandwiches. Keep your eye out for the real crème de la crème, Brown's specialty, French-inspired mousse cakes. 3 Green St., Jamaica Plain (617-522-6202).

The Whole Family... The organic apple doesn't fall far from the tree when it comes to Steve Bernard, founder of Cape Cod Potato Chips, and daughter Nicole Dawes. Dawes recently hauled her dad out of retirement with her plan to launch her own line of organic snack foods called Late July. "It wasn't until I was pregnant with my first child that I realized how few great-tasting, organic snacks there are," says Dawes. She sold her dad on the idea, tested recipes in her own kitchen for months and finally introduced her first line of crackers last fall. USDA-certified organic saltine, butter and cheddar crackers—all free of trans fats and hydrogenated oils—are available at Shaw's and Stop & Shop.

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Nice Tie... Dashing preppies now have a new clothing option that ought to perfectly complement a pair of Nantucket reds and a natty blazer: a tie emblazoned with a map of Beacon Hill. The silk ties, made in Italy and sold to benefit the Beacon Hill Civic Association, cost $55 (or $45 for BHCA members). Besides being stylish, the ties ought to help Beacon Hill residents find their way home after a night at the Hill. Call 617-227-1922 to tie one on.

A Mammoth Experience... The Brattle Theatre and the Enormous Room are teaming up for a new series of movies and DJs at the Central Square hotspot. M.O.S. (from the old Hollywood slang for shooting without sound, or, in faux German, "mit out sound") takes place the last Saturday of each month. The Enormous Room's favorite DJs spin tunes to accompany the Brattle's choice of films—which are screened silently (subtitled when available). The series launched Jan. 25 with a Classic Kung Fu–themed night and DJs Nick Follett and P.J. Gray. 567 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-491-5550). 9 pm. No cover.

Valentine's for Nerds... Love and technology merge in two unusual Valentine's Day packages offered by the Hotel @ MIT. Hardware-loving couples who buy into the hotel's "iMac-nificent" package get his-and-her iMacs, a one-night stay in the Presidential suite, Champagne and dinner for two at Sidney's Grille—for $3,295. The Personal Tech package gets you two Palm Pilots, a night in a suite, dinner for two at the Grille and transportation to a Blue Man Group performance (plus two tickets). This one's $995 a couple. What else would you expect from a hotel a stone's throw from MIT? Available through Feb. 28. www.hotelatmit.com.

The Concorde of Coaches... Sure Fung Wah's got game when it comes to convenient, cheap transportation to the Big Apple. But luxurious? Not exactly. If price is no object and high-speed Internet and Ethernet access and reclining leather chairs a necessity, look to LimoLiner. The luxury motor coach service, which launched a few months ago, takes passengers from the Hilton Back Bay to the Hilton Midtown Manhattan in four hours. Five music stations, DVD screening, an en route attendant and complimentary snacks, beverages and magazines are just some of the other amenities. Each bus—excuse us, carriage—also has a mini conference room for corporate meetings. The LimoLiner departs three times daily Monday through Friday, and once on Sundays, for $69 one way. Call it the un–Fung Wah. (888-546-5469). www.limoliner.com.

Incoming Choppers... In a town where grinning at a stranger is as suspicious as a handshake in a dark alley, it takes a lot of guts to publicly promote a campaign that encourages random smiling. Hokey as it sounds to our Back Bay ears, Bren Bataclan launched the Smile Boston Project (not to be confused with SmileBoston cosmetic dentistry) last fall, after noticing an inherent lack of smiling in Boston. The Cambridge-based artist began leaving large smiley-face paintings all over Boston with notes that read, "This painting is yours if you promise to smile at random people more often." Bataclan, who plans to take his project to other cities, says he has received tremendous feedback from the project via his Web site. Check out his art at www.bataclan.com.

Mystery Books... Stalkers, restraining orders and other extreme cases aside, everyone loves a secret admirer. Harvard Book Store has tapped into the excitement of a mysterious crush, and through Feb. 15, will wrap your Valentine's gift (purchased at the store) and notify the lucky man or woman that someone's been thinking of them. It's your responsibility to divulge your identity and the recipient's job to pick up the gift.

Big Brothers of Massachusetts Bay celebrated Big Night 5 at the Hynes Convention Center Jan. 24. More than 1,000 party-goers were transported back to ancient times at the "Walk Like an Egyptian"–themed gala. Highlights of the evening were a sumptuous dinner prepared by four Boston celebrity chefs and entertainment by Earth, Wind & Fire. The $1,000-per-plate event raised $1.4 million for the Big Brothers Big Sisters agency.

STATE OF MY UNION

Stick with me and 'roid-raging terrorists won't get you

I just watched the State of the Union address and I'm now extremely jealous of the president's speechwriters. They have the easiest writing job in the world: The State of the Union address doesn't actually say how anything is going to be done, just that it would be really swell if a bunch of stuff happened. It's like a letter to Santa. So, with an eye toward getting noticed by some White House honchos and landing a plum presidential speechwriting gig, here's my own State of Ez's Union address.

Mr. Speaker, members of Congress, guests who are working hard and guests who are hardly working: Here's what's up with me. Over the past year, much has happened. Some of it has been gravy, and some of it has tested our resolve, which means it was probably bad, because when did eating an ice cream cone at the beach test your resolve? Maybe if it fell in your lap and a seagull tried to peck it off or something. The main thing to remember is that none of it was my fault. Why didn't the Red Sox go to the World Series, you ask? All I've got to say is that if Grade A eggs are the largest, then Grade E would sure be little ones. Yup. Grade E little, they might call them.

But I'm not here to point fingers, I'm here to pull them. Pull them into a glorious new era. An era of economic growth in which I will upgrade my bank account to one where I can visit the teller without getting charged $2. An era of a cleaner environment, where Roommate Scott will get his boxes of stuff out of the hallway because, honestly, they've been sitting there "temporarily" since we moved in last September. An era of strengthened family values, or else I'll give you something to cry about. Finally, this will be an era of parallel construction for all of our sentences.

Unfortunately, there will always be forces of evil in the world, depraved outlaws who seek to undermine the happiness of every American with their nefarious policies. Specifically, I'm talking about the Harbor Garage next to the aquarium, where they charged me $56 to park overnight, even though their signs say that the maximum is $28. Well, it's $28 until 5 am, then it's another $28, apparently because of a very expensive time warp that occurs in the Harbor Garage early every morning. They refuse to change their signs to make this clear, even if you point out that it would be cheaper just to park on the nearest handicap ramp (a $50 ticket). The Harbor Garage and, to a lesser extent, North Korea, prove that there is still much work to be done before the world is safe from mankind's darkest impulses.

I will continue my popular culture education initiative, which has seen me read the first three Harry Potter books and watch The Real World: San Diego as often as three times a week. No longer am I confused by references to Muggles or left out of debates about Robin's possible breast augmentation ("possible": wink wink).

On the health front, we must fight that scourge of our society, steroids. Everywhere you go you see the effects of this devastating epidemic. It's such a prevalent problem that the other day I saw a guy roid-rage at the Souper Salad lettuce bin, flipping over the entire salad bar when he found a wilted piece of radicchio mixed in with the iceberg. "Third time this week that's happened," the manager told me. What price big muscles? This is no kind of example for our children. When I asked my 4-year-old cousin who his favorite football player was, he said Lyle Alzado. I asked him who his favorite wrestler was, and he said Hulk Hogan—'80s Hulk Hogan. I asked him who his favorite governor was, and you can probably guess who he named: Howard Dean! Howard Dean mad! Arrgggaghhh! Now there's a guy with a steroid problem. It's time to stop the madness, and I'm leading the way by changing my 'roiding ways. I only use them myself because having small testicles is so convenient.

OVER THE PAST YEAR, MUCH HAS HAPPENED. THE THING TO REMEMBER IS THAT NONE OF IT WAS MY FAULT

I'd like to close this speech by sharing a letter from a child that's loaded with sickening sentimentality. Unfortunately, little kids don't write to me and ask grandiose questions about how they can change the world. So I wrote a letter to myself left-handed. It reads, "Dear Ez. My name is Little Chucky, and I have a question for you. What lives in the forest, has brown fur, and can't see a damn thing?" No-eye deer, Chucky, no-eye deer. IB

CAM NEELY

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Hockey legend Cam Neely was born and raised in British Columbia and spent 13 years playing in the NHL, first for the Vancouver Canucks and (for 10 years) as a Boston Bruin. With 726 games played, 395 goals and 299 assists, he was one of the game's all-time greatest players, and his pugnacious, hard-driving style defined the term "power forward." Only the second player in Bruins history to record back-to-back 50-goal seasons, he had 14 career hat tricks and for many years led the Bruins in scoring. He was also named to the NHL All-Star team several times. His career ended in 1996 due to a hip injury that resulted from an aggressive check by Pittsburgh Penguins player Ulf Samuelsson. Even before being forced into retirement, however, he had created the Cam Neely Foundation, which he serves as president of. In August 1997, it opened the Neely House, a guest house for cancer patients and their families at New England Medical Center. In addition to his numerous other charitable efforts, Neely has also guest-starred on the television show Beverly Hills, 90210 and appeared in the motion pictures Monument Ave., Dumb and Dumber, Mighty Ducks II and Me, Myself & Irene. On Jan. 12, the Bruins retired his number 8 at a ceremony at the FleetCenter, and he was scheduled to join actors Michael J. Fox and Denis Leary on Jan. 31 in hosting his second annual gala fund-raiser to benefit a trio of charities. Neely lives in Lincoln with his wife, Paulina, and their children, Jack and Ava.

JS: What one adjective would you use to describe hoisting your jersey to the rafters a few weeks ago?

CN: Unbelievable.

JS: If I'd asked you when you were 15 what you'd be doing now, what would you have said?

CN: That I'd be a petroleum distributor, which is a fancy way of saying someone who pumps gas. That was one of my last jobs as a youngster. My Dad owned a service station and I worked there.

JS: Is Boston the best hockey town in the U.S.?

CN: I believe so, going on my experience of playing in the Garden.

JS: Speaking of which: Don't you miss it, and more to the point, doesn't the FleetCenter suck?

CN: I'm not a fan of the FleetCenter. It's a huge change in atmosphere. The Garden was awesome. I don't know how comfortable it was, but it was the best place to play.

JS: Do you still watch hockey religiously?

> AFTER 13 YEARS OF BEING ABLE TO GET MY FRUSTRATIONS OUT PHYSICALLY, SHOVING THAT OFF WAS TOUGH, ESPECIALLY WHEN I WANT TO BOP SOMEBODY.

CN: I never did. I was always a participant, never a spectator.

JS: So what sports do you watch?

CN: Probably golf, which oddly enough I hated when I was a kid.

JS: What is it with hockey players and golf?

CN: The seasons obviously mesh, and there's a lot of similarities, like the mechanics of the swing.

JS: Has hockey changed for the better or worse since you left?

CN: I think it was starting to change for the worse even my last few years playing. My opinion is that expansion hasn't helped the game. There used to be 21 teams. Now there's 30, and it's thinned the talent out in a way that affects the dynamics on each team. Also, going to the conference format, like basketball, has hurt the divisional rivalries. We don't have the Montreal/Boston matchups like we used to. Hockey's really a regional sport. It's not a national sport, and when you take that rivalry out, people aren't as excited as they used to be.

JS: Ever consider joining the Ice Capades?

CN: [Laughs.] Only if they had full-contact Ice Capades.

JS: I'll look into it. So who's funnier—Denis Leary or Michael J. Fox?

CN: Their senses of humor are different. Denis is more caustic, and Mike's wit is very dry and quick.

JS: What one thing would you like to say to Ulf Samuelsson?

CN: How about "F--- you"? [Laughs.] I've said just about everything I have to say to him.

JS: Wayne Gretzky or Bobby Orr?

CN: Oh, what Bobby did for hockey in New England is pretty amazing. You look at a lot of the New England kids playing in the NHL now, it's probably because their parents got into hockey when Bobby Orr was playing. What he did for the position of defense, too. He changed the way it was played. As for Wayne Gretzky, what he did for the game nationally was major. It's hard to compare them because it was different eras, but they both added a tremendous amount to the game.

JS: Would you ever let Jack play pro hockey?

CN: If he wanted to, absolutely. Whatever he wants to do.

JS: How about Ava?

CN: Yeah! [Chuckles.] She's got some of my toughness, so she'd probably be great.

JS: You still a brawler?

CN: [Laughs.] I'd like to be, when I get aggravated, and I would be, if I could get away with a five-minute penalty instead of handcuffs.

JS: So how do you handle all that rage you used to expel through playing? On the ice, you were known as a fighter, but in your personal life and socially, your reputation is very gentlemanly.

CN: Well, that transition was hard. After 13 years of being able to get my frustrations out physically, which was a nice release, shoving that off was tough, especially when I want to bop somebody. But it's no different than being in an office. You just can't do it. I've always been very conscious of what I should and shouldn't do. [Laughs.] Also, I'm a Gemini, so maybe that explains the two sides of my personality.

JS: Are all your teeth your own?

CN: No! I have bits of some, and two are definitely gone for good. There's probably five or six that are mostly courtesy of my dentist.

JS: What's your response to the stereotyping of hockey players as toothless, uneducated goons from nowheresville?

CN: You don't hear that much anymore. Years ago, that image was prevalent, but I think people are more sophisticated, and they look at the game differently. Back in the '70s, when it was one brawl after another, and the movie Slap Shot came out—a lot of people who saw that movie never watched hockey, and they assumed all hockey players were like that.

JS: What about salaries for pro athletes. Are they out of control?

CN: Well, the owners have to look at whether they can justify paying these kinds of salaries while making sure the fans can afford to go see the games. When you price the fans out, you've gotta think they're paying them too much, but that's the owners' fault. I don't care what profession you're in—if someone offers you more money, you're gonna take it.

JS: If you were a character in Disney on Ice, who would you be?

CN: [Laughs.] Probably the Beast.

JS:What do you most want to be remembered for?

CN: Well, what I do with the foundation is pretty special, and how it affects people's lives in a more serious way. It's very gratifying to me. But on the other hand, my hockey career was extremely gratifying to me, too, and exciting. What we're accomplishing here will probably be better remembered, over the long term. But then, one wouldn't be possible without the other. IB

HOW TO DEAL: A Guide for Brides

FAMILY STRESS AND UNEXPECTED MISHAPS ARE PART OF ANY WEDDING, BUT THEY DON'T HAVE TO RUIN YOUR DAY. TAKE IT FROM THOSE WHO'VE BEEN THERE.

BY MARGIT FEURY RAGLAND

Every bride dreams her wedding will be perfect. But forget about it—it's not going to happen. With an event that brings together a group of not-so-carefully cast characters, inevitably something or someone will botch things up.

"In my 17 years of shooting weddings, I've never been to one where everything went exactly as planned," says videographer Jim Nogueira, owner of JMN Productions in Milford. "There are always things that don't quite happen the way that they're supposed to."

For one bride, it was the guest who spilled red wine on her gown just before she was introduced at the reception. For another, it was the trolley driver who took the guests on a two-hour scenic route to the reception that was only 15 minutes from the church—while an expensive cocktail party went to waste.

With countless potential mishaps waiting to happen, how does a bride cope? We got the lowdown from recent brides and other experts who know just how to deal—with moms, bridesmaids, in-laws and anyone else who could trip you up as you make your way down the aisle.

THE SLACKING GROOM

The whole reason you're getting married is that you love this guy. Keep reminding yourself of that fact. Without a doubt there will be moments when you want to call the whole thing off, but the reality is most men just aren't programmed to plan a big, beautiful party. And if you think he can at least plan the honeymoon, think again.

✻When you hear the advice "Put everything in writing," that goes for dealing with your groom too. If you want him to get you a list of addresses, don't just tell him. He'll forget. Put it on the groom's to-do list on the fridge, with the date of when you want it done and when you put it there.

—Jon Saphire, owner of Saphire Manor, a wedding reception site in Sharon ✻After not being around for the entire planning period [due to visa issues], when my groom finally returned from Mexico, less than two weeks before the wedding, he suddenly wanted to take over the planning of music. He had burned a few CDs that he basically wanted to hand over to the DJ to play. "Why bother paying for a DJ?" was my first thought. My second was worse: "My wedding will just be a night of his friends slam dancing." After some heated discussions, we both chose our must-have lists of music and agreed to let the DJ do the rest. You must be willing to compromise, especially if it's an issue between you and your fiancé.

—Laurie Pani of Charlestown, married August 2002

✻Remember that your groom has probably not been envisioning this day since he was very young. And chances are, no matter how many times he's been a groomsman, he's never been on the "inside" of wedding planning before. Cut him some slack.

—Lee Ann Wolff, wedding dance instructor in Lawrence

MADDENING MOMS

Perhaps they mean well, but mothers of the bride often are the most stress-inducing participants in wedding planning. Mothers generally fall into one of two categories: those who won't budge from their dead-set opinions and those who change their mind each time you speak with them. Don't let your mother (or your future mother-in-law) make you loony.

⁎My mother was the quintessential mother of the bride. The biggest argument was over the length of our guest list. After she had just added 45 people to it, she insisted that I would not enjoy myself at a wedding with more than 100 guests. She started lopping off my friends' names. She then proclaimed that if there was even the slightest chance that someone might be insulted by not being invited, I must invite them. I kid you not—she never even noticed that she was arguing two opposite points! Then she suddenly began inviting neighbors that had moved away years ago, who we had not been close to when they lived in the neighborhood. I just tried to keep my sense of humor. And I reminded myself of what the comedian Rita Rudner once said: "Of course my mother can push my buttons. She installed them!"

—Margaret Munro Lyons of Jamaica Plain, married May 2002

⁎Figure out what's really, truly important to you before you start planning and don't settle for less than what you want. Everything else is negotiable. My mother was set on having the ceremony in Provincetown, near our family summer home. But the reception site was on the other side of the Cape. I found plenty of other, more convenient places to have the ceremony. But my mother kept pushing the issue. To end the battle, I gave in. But to keep our guests entertained on their traffic-filled trip to the reception, we made a CD for everyone that had songs chosen by members of the wedding party, including everyone from our parents to our 7-year-old niece from Mexico.

—Laurie Pani

⁎Leave your future mother-in-law at home when picking out your bridal gown. All brides are so happy when they first come in to look for their dress. But they make the mistake of bringing along the whole peanut gallery. As soon as the first person says, "No, that dress isn't you" or "You look better in ivory," the bride gets confused, upset and often leaves crying. Bring one friend or your mother with you. If you put on the dress and feel special, then that's the dress to buy.

—Yolanda Cellucci, owner of Yolanda's Bridal Salon in Waltham

"WHEN YOU HEAR THE ADVICE 'PUT EVERYTHING IN WRITING,' THAT GOES FOR DEALING WITH YOUR FIANCÉ TOO."

—JON SAPHIRE, OWNER, SAPHIRE MANOR

⁎My husband's family decided not to come to the wedding due to their objections with his marrying a non-Jewish woman. Relative to that, everything else was pretty low-stress. Even now that we're married we still cope with the stress of his family, but we really focus on how lucky we are to be together and to have found one another. Our wedding day was about celebrating our love and our new life together, not about family issues.

—Lynne Schaffer of Newton, married September 2003

⁎My mother-in-law kept adding more and more of her friends to the guest list, to the point where my in-laws had twice the number of guests my parents had. My advice to other brides: Give your mother-in-law-to-be a set number of people she can invite, and be firm about making her stick to it.

—A Charlestown bride who was married in September 2003 and who hopes to be friends with her new mother-in-law (so we agreed not to print her name)

BRATTY BRIDESMAIDS

Just because they're your best friends or closest relatives doesn't mean they'll love the dress, or that they'll know how to be helpful. Choose them carefully, and then don't take anything they say or do too personally.

⁎My maid of honor kept crying at inopportune times, such as at my bridal shower. Two days before the ceremony, she called to say that I could ask someone else to be my maid of honor if I wanted to. I was very lucky to have four other bridesmaids who picked up the slack that my maid of honor wasn't able to carry. One of my bridesmaids was married a year and half before and understood wedding stress. She would take me out to bars and let me vent.

—Cree Holland McDaniels of Boston, married August 2002

⁎Pick bridesmaids you can count on. Often there's pressure to include people that you wouldn't want to spend a lot of time with during stressful events. Try to avoid the formalities. You need people who will prop you up, not tear you down. If you wouldn't want to travel with her, then don't put her in your wedding party.

—Margaret Munro Lyons

⁎One of my bridesmaids couldn't make it to pick out bridesmaid dresses. Then, when it was time to choose the flowers, she was unavailable. Two months before the wedding, she realized she might not be able to make it to my big day. I gave up and suggested that we just plan for her not to attend.

—Lynne Schaffer

UNEXPECTED PAINS IN THE NECK

Sometimes the people you least expect to cause problems can stress you the most.

⁎My brother, a groomsman, never got the message that we were getting pictures taken on the beach between the wedding and the reception. When I arrived at the reception, my brother was upset and his wife was furious. She screamed at me in the parking lot and told me I didn't love my brother—who is my hero, by the way. I ended up in tears. All I could do was wipe my face clean, put my chin up, and try not to let it affect my special day. If something upsets you on your wedding day, put it past you for the day and deal with it when all the emotions are passed.

—Laurie Pani

"PICK BRIDESMAIDS YOU CAN COUNT ON. IF YOU WOULDN'T WANT TO TRAVEL WITH HER, THEN DON'T PUT HER IN YOUR WEDDING PARTY."

—MARGARET MUNRO LYONS, MARRIED MAY 2002

⁎After spending about an hour and a half at my first fitting—standing in the most unnatural, contorted poses—my limbs were numb and I thought I would drop. Suddenly the seamstress said, "Oops, I just bled on your dress!" I thought she was kidding until I looked in the mirror and saw the reflection of my bridesmaid, staring in open-mouthed horror, at the back of my dress. Miraculously, blood can come out of white fabric with peroxide. Who knew?

—Margaret Munro Lyons

⁎One of our guests brought a portable TV into the reception, so he could watch the football game at dinner. Thankfully, he was considerate enough to wear a headset, so the other tables didn't have to listen to the play-by-play. Make sure you have a designated "bouncer" to deal with unexpected rude or unwelcome guests.

—Lynne Schaffer

BOTTOM-LINE ADVICE

⁎Don't try and do it all on your own. Delegate, delegate, delegate. If people ask if they can help, give them one—or two—things to do.

—Laurie Pani

⁎When you feel that you can't cope, it's time to turn to sushi, margaritas and Ativan!

—Margaret Munro Lyons

⁎Take a deep breath before walking down the aisle. Enjoy the moment and relish in the fact that you are going to have the most wonderful day. It will go by soooooooo fast!

—Cree Holland McDaniels

⁎Remember that everyone who comes to the wedding is there because they love you and are happy for you. Don't worry about whether they'll like the entrée or the wedding favors.

—Lynne Schaffer

⁎As soon as you hit the rehearsal, the planning is over. Accept what is, let go of what is not, and have a blast. Come on, it's your party!

—Margaret Munro Lyons

THE WELL-MANNERED WEDDING GUEST

CAN YOU WEAR WHITE TO A WEDDING? DO YOU REALLY HAVE A WHOLE YEAR TO SEND A GIFT? ETIQUETTE EXPERTS AND BRIDES HELP ENSURE YOU DON'T BECOME A PAIN IN THE BUSTLE.

BY ERIN HAGEDORN ILLUSTRATION BY SCOTT HAGEDORN

Even if you've no immediate plans to tie the knot yourself, you'll probably be attending a wedding sometime soon. Other than a flat-screen TV or a big pile of money, one of the best gifts you can give the betrothed couple doesn't come with a price tag. It's the gift of good manners and not adding to the happy pair's already sky-high stress level by acting foolishly, imposing or making some kind of unreasonable request.

Some behavior rules for wedding guests are pretty obvious, and if you have a handle on the standard social graces, you'll easily avoid decorum disaster: Don't discuss bachelor party shenanigans in front of the bride. You may not body-check other single women in order to catch the bouquet. No matter how good they look, do not taste-test the wedding cake icing or leer at the bride. Don't wear anything that would embarrass Pamela Anderson.

Other rules for guest behavior, however, are a little less apparent, especially if you've never been married yourself and haven't dealt with the scads of "innocent" requests (Can you seat me next to the hottie groomsman? Can I bring along a friend?) or worried about registries or reception costs per person.

Here, on behalf of stressed out brides and grooms everywhere, and with the goal of turning you into the guest that would do Miss Manners proud, we address all those nagging wedding etiquette questions you never quite discovered the answers to. We enlisted the help of local etiquette gurus Samantha von Sperling of Polished Social Image Consultants; Jodi R. R. Smith, founder of Mannersmith Etiquette Consulting; Kim Sternick, director of catering for Legal Sea Foods at the Exchange Conference Center; and a quartet of recent brides: Jessica, Rebecca, Anne and Tara.

Is it OK to ask a good friend if you can be in his/her wedding party?

Samantha: As much as you may want to be involved, it's not fair to pressure the bride this way. Don't take it personally if you're not asked. A wedding is one day. A friendship is for life.

Jodi: No! Choosing one's wedding attendants is a difficult enough task without a friend adding stress by insisting they be included. Even if you asked the bride to be your maid of honor for your wedding, she's not obligated to ask you in return.

Jessica: No. That would be totally presumptuous and highly inappropriate. If asked, be gracious. If not asked, be similarly gracious.

Should you always buy a gift from the couple's registry?

Samantha: If the couple has a registry, obviously they have selected items that they like and/or may need. However, if you live in another country where the store is not accessible or you wish to give something else that you think would be unique or that only you could give them, go ahead. It's the thought that counts.

Jodi: No. A registry is a wish list created by the bride and groom. It's there for those who wish to use it as a guide. Some of the best, most creative gifts are the ones that are not from the registry.

Jessica: Yes, unless you know the couple well enough to identify a unique gift that you're confident will delight them. And always include a gift receipt.

Anne: If I had to go back and do it all over again, I would make sure to register for more items. I mean, I like silver platters and all, just not 80 of them.

Tara: A friend from school received a crystal vase that wasn't on her registry. She and her spouse sent the vase back to the couple who gave it to them with a note that said a gift off their registry would be more appreciated. [The two couples] haven't spoken since.

What's the appropriate attire for the church ceremony? Are bare shoulders still taboo?

Kim: Technically yes. You should be appropriately attired for a wedding. Bare shoulders do not make you a sinner as long as the rest of your coverage is appropriate.

Samantha: It's poor etiquette to bare your shoulders in a house of worship. Generally it's better to bring at least a wrap, shawl or pashmina to cover your shoulders.

Jodi: Some religious sites are very modern and may not require the same level of modesty. If you're not sure, it's better to be covered than not.

Can you ask the bride for permission to bring a guest if your invitation is made out only to you?

Samantha: No. Here is an exception: You know the bride extremely well, she is not on a shoestring budget, you yourself just got engaged (or your aged aunt is flying in from Timbuktu) and it is an emergency. Only then can you ask, but you do not expect.

Jodi: It depends. If you are not dating anyone, then you cannot ask to add additional guests and expense to an already expensive event. If you've been seriously dating someone and there's the possibility that the bride was unaware of your relationship, then you can call to let her know you have someone in your life.

Rebecca: Absolutely not. Someone did this to me and my fiancé. We made the mistake of leaving a blank space on our reply cards where people could fill in the number of people coming. We had to e-mail them and explain that they couldn't. It was very awkward for both sides.

Kim: No! Wedding guest lists are compiled for many reasons. Perhaps it's financial or there are space limitations. And never bring [an uninvited] guest that you haven't RSVPed for.

Is it appropriate to wear white or black to a wedding?

Samantha: An all-white outfit is seen as stealing attention away from the bride. Remember, it's her day. Off-white, on the other hand, is OK. An all-black outfit for a winter wedding or a wedding in a cold climate is acceptable; a black summer dress is also OK.

Jodi: Black was banned from weddings in days of old because it was worn by those in mourning, and mourners would not attend a wedding. In some cultures it was seen as a bad omen or as a way of showing your disapproval of the pair. Nowadays, black is considered elegant and sophisticated. White, on the other hand, is seen as being petty and trying to steal the spotlight from the bride.

Is it better to bring your wedding gift to the wedding or mail it?

Samantha: The bride should be delighted that you were thoughtful enough to give a gift, period. However, note that the happy couple may be catching a plane after dinner or have some such other arrangement. Weddings can be chaos. It may be easier for the bride to receive a gift beforehand by mail.

Jodi: Wedding gifts should be sent to the bride in advance of the wedding. Gifts brought to a wedding run the risk of being lost, broken or stolen.

Jessica: Mail it after the wedding. Hauling gifts from the reception back home is a drag, and receiving gifts after the wedding is always fun. I actually really enjoyed those under-the-wire gifts received 364 days after the wedding.

How long do you have after the wedding to send your gift?

Samantha: Typically, wedding gifts should be received by the couple before their wedding day, but if you do send your gift after the wedding day, send it at soon as possible.

Jodi: I'd like to dispel this myth. Guests do not have a year to send a gift, and bridal couples do not have a year to write their thank you notes. Wedding gifts should be sent a week or two prior to the wedding, and thank you notes should be completed within six weeks of the marriage. Wedding gifts sent before the wedding may be acknowledged upon receipt.

Jessica: Exactly 365 days.

How much should you spend on a wedding gift?

Samantha: It's appropriate to spend between $50 and $1,000 for a wedding gift depending on your budget and relationship to the bride or groom.

Jodi: How much do you make? Where do you live? What's your relationship to the couple? An investment banker who is the groom's brother and best man might spend $500. A recent college grad or the bride's roommate might spend $75. An elderly great aunt might spend $25. In Boston, typically, a married couple attending a wedding will give a gift in the $100 to $200 range.

Rebecca: If it's a formal wedding, $100 or more, especially if you're part of a couple.

If you don't go to the wedding, should you still send a gift?

Samantha: If you choose not to attend a wedding you were invited to and then don't send a gift, you are sending the message that you are choosing to terminate your relationship with this person. In other words, this is construed to be a rude and aggressive gesture.

Jodi: While wedding invitations do not require the obligation of a gift, if someone was kind enough to extend an invitation to one of their life's most precious events, you should be kind enough to reciprocate with at least a token of your esteem.

Jessica: I think it's good karma to send something to let the couple know they're in your thoughts.

Tara: If the couple came to your wedding and gave you a gift, you definitely have to send a gift. If you don't really know the couple then you don't have to.

Kim: A card thanking them for the invitation as well as offering congratulations is a must. A gift is not, although it is nice and I certainly would send one.

If you get invited with a guest but are single, can you bring a friend of the same sex?

Samantha: If you do not have a serious girlfriend or boyfriend to bring, you should RSVP and thank [the couple] for the kind invitation but say that only you will be attending. To not do this would be selfish.

Jodi: If there are going to be eligible men at the event (sans dates), I'd go alone. Weddings are great places for meeting new romantic partners. As a female, if everyone is bringing a date, I'd pick a male friend to attend with me.

Jessica: Sure bring anyone, if the invitation is addressed to you and guest.

Tara: I don't think it's appropriate. Weddings can cost as much as $200 a person. Don't make your friends pay so that you can have someone to gossip with.

Is it OK to get blitzed at the wedding?

Samantha: It is absolutely not OK to get obnoxiously, fall-down drunk at a wedding. A little tipsy is acceptable. And if you are an aggressive, belligerent drunk, don't even think about it. A side note: At one wedding, the bridesmaids jumped onto the table and lifted up their skirts to dance the can-can. Unless you are in Las Vegas and the bride and groom are being married by Elvis accompanied by showgirls, this is not appropriate behavior.

Jodi: No. In fact, I cannot think of a social event where it's acceptable to "get blitzed." Weddings are not keggers.

Kim: No! Although it makes for great stories, those aren't the kind of memories the bride and groom want to have.

Rebecca: Absolutely.

Lisa: Sure, just don't cause a scene. IB

marvelous MINI-MOONS

FOR BOSTON'S NEWLYWEDS, POSTNUPTIAL RELAXATION IS A CAR RIDE AWAY

The Main Inn at the Old Inn on the Green, New Marlborough, Mass.

BY JESSICA IREDALE

Tradition has it that once the vows are said, the cake cut and bouquet tossed, it's time for the newlyweds to hop on a plane and head out for a week's recuperation in a tropical paradise. But if the happy couple just dropped upwards of $35,000 on their big day, seven nights at the Ritz-Carlton Bali might not be in their budget. Sometimes just-marrieds are simply exhausted from months of wedding planning, and unwilling to deal with airports and travel itineraries. Or perhaps their careers are too demanding to allow for an extended vacation on top of time already taken off for the wedding.

Wedding planner Arlene Cronk, who founded the Boston Wedding Group, says she sees many two-career couples opting for a shorter trip immediately after the wedding. "If they're getting married during a particularly busy season, and they can't leave work for an extended period of time, couples often take just a couple of days after the wedding and then take the extended honeymoon in a month or so."

Kimberly and Chris Hine, who made a brief escape to Martha's Vineyard after their July wedding in Lexington, are one example. "We decided we'd rather save the money for when we really needed a break from work, and when it was cold in New England and warm in Mexico," says Kimberly. "We didn't want to spend a lot of time traveling and dealing with the hassle of flying right after the wedding. We wanted to just relax and chill."

Whether to save time, money or their sanity, many couples are following their New England nuptials with a two- or three-day romantic getaway—a mini-moon, if you will. Lucky for Boston brides and grooms, the Northeast is stocked with inns, bed-and-breakfasts and upscale resorts that specialize in candlelit dinners, in-room massages, jacuzzis for two and privacy with a view. From ultra-luxe cottages to cozy B&Bs, here's a sampling of spots with the goods for a sweet mini-moon.

MAINE

THE WHITE BARN INN

37 Beach Ave., Kennebunkport (207-967-2321).
www.whitebarninn.com. 1.5 hours from Boston.

If there ever was a reason to honeymoon in Maine, this is it. With its AAA Five Diamond Award–winning dining room, the grand dame of New England inns tops nearly every food and travel writer's not-to-be-missed list. A cluster of waterfront cottages, an 1860s clapboard homestead and two converted barns add up to 29 accommodations, and all are decorated with lavish fabrics and 19th-century antiques. White Barn pampers guests with terry-lined silk robes, chichi Molton Brown toiletries and hardy fruit baskets in every room, and other on-site amenities include a heated outdoor swimming pool and in-room spa services. White Barn sales manager Anita Taggersell recommends the butler-drawn Double Bubble Champagne bath ($34.50 plus cost of Champagne) for newlyweds. The service includes candles, Champagne from the wine list and Molton Brown products with orchid and cinnamon. Honeymooners are greeted with Champagne at their first dinner in the dining room (a must). Luxury-seeking couples can splurge for Room Eight, which features a king-size bed, double-sided fireplace that burns in two rooms, Jacuzzi tub and a glass-enclosed steam shower. The Loft Suite tops out with a cathedral ceiling, a private deck and entranceway, a king-size bed, a fireplace, an oversize marble bath and whirlpool, and a steam shower. Three days seem too short? Many agree. "People who come on their honeymoon tend to come back for their anniversaries," says Taggersell. $275–$750 nightly.

Beach Plum Inn, Menemsha, Martha's Vineyard

The Summer House Siasconset, Nantucket

MASSACHUSETTS

BEACH PLUM INN & RESTAURANT

50 Beach Plum Lane, Menemsha, Martha's Vineyard (508-645-9454). www.beachpluminn.com. 3 hours from Boston.

Blooming gardens, panoramic ocean views, private beaches and a Champagne greeting by innkeeper Craig Arnold are all selling points of this classic shingled inn. But the six secluded cottages are the real draw for just-marrieds. Bridal Wreath, the honeymoon suite, has a king-size four-poster bed, a lofted ceiling and a sitting area. Newlyweds can hole up in their cottage and take advantage of the Jacuzzi, while away the hours in the two-person hammock on their private sun deck, or loll on Menemsha Beach or the nearby private beaches Lucy Vincent (part of which is a nude beach) and Squibnocket. If love isn't sustenance enough, the inn serves complimentary breakfast every morning and has a four-star restaurant. In addition to the cottages, six suites are available in the main house. $210–$400 nightly.

THORNCROFT INN

460 Main St., Vineyard Haven, Martha's Vineyard (800-332-1236). www.thorncroft.com. 2–2.5 hours from Boston.

Couples-only resorts can raise a few eyebrows. Swingers? Sandals? Don't worry, the Thorncroft is simply an old-fashioned country inn that specializes in honeymoons, anniversaries, engagements and elopements. While you won't find any children wandering the 14 restored rooms, you will find canopied beds, wood-burning fireplaces, private balconies, two-person whirlpools and in-room 300-gallon hot tubs. Guests in all rooms receive a full country breakfast and afternoon tea and pastries, and the three-and-a-half-acre property, located in West Chop, is one block from the beach and just under a mile from the shops and restaurants on Main Street. "Our guests aren't looking to be in the middle of the noise," says innkeeper Carl Buder. "We're near enough to everything you want, but we're not remote either." $210–$475 nightly.

THE SUMMER HOUSE SIASCONSET

17 Ocean Ave., Siasconset, Nantucket (508-257-4577). www.thesummerhouse.com. 2.5–3 hours from Boston.

Real estate tycoons would probably give their first born for a piece of the Summer House's Nantucket beachside property. On the easternmost tip of the island, the 10 rose-covered cottages perched on a bluff overlooking the Atlantic provide a pitch-perfect backdrop for romance. The Summer House's Penrose cottage has a working fireplace, and every cottage comes equipped with a marble Jacuzzi and is stocked with the Summer House's lush Frette robes and duvets (plus, for newlyweds, a complimentary bottle of Champagne). Breakfast is served daily in the gardens, the restaurant or in bed, and lovebirds travel for miles to experience dining at the main restaurant, amid candlelight and live piano music indoors, or alfresco on the porch. "In June or September, it's not unheard of for us to have honeymooners in four out of the 10 cottages," says general manager Susan Manolis. $250–$925 nightly.

WHEATLEIGH

Hawthorne Road, Lenox (413-637-0610). www.wheatleigh.com. 2 hours from Boston.

Wheatleigh was originally built as a wedding present for the owner's daughter in the late 1800s, and that fact hints at its inherent romantic charm. An inn for more than 20 years, the 19-guestroom Italian-style villa overlooking the Berkshire mountains and lakes has been called the most sophisticated country house hotel in America by travel guru Andrew Harper. Tiffany windows, elaborate mantles and high ceilings create an old-world feeling, but the amenities are as modern as they come. Chocolate, Champagne and fruit are standard for honeymooners, but general manager Francois Thomas says the most romantic service is the complimentary five-course, private in-room dinner. The two-floor treehouse suite, called the Aviary, has a downstairs sitting room that opens to a terrace and a spiral staircase that leads up to sleeping quarters—almost literally in the trees—with king-size bed, soaking tub and separate shower. $545–$1,550 nightly.

THE WHALEWALK INN

220 Bridge Road, Eastham (800-440-1281). www.whalewalkinn.com. 1.5 hours from Boston.

Far from the tourist traps of Hyannis and Falmouth, Eastham's Whalewalk Inn is neatly situated on the quiet Outer Cape, between Cape Cod Bay and the National Seashore. French doors, four-poster king-size beds and wing-backed chairs decorate each of the 16 rooms on the three-acre compound, and available room options include steam showers, heated tile floors and heated towel rack, Jacuzzis and whirlpool tubs. Newlyweds are greeted with Champagne and can enjoy a gourmet country breakfast and an afternoon hors d'ouevres hour daily. Assistant innkeeper Heather Conlin suggests booking one of the largest and most unique accommodations: Carriage House 5 or 6, or Room 1 in the Main Inn. All three have fireside sitting areas, the Carriage House rooms have balconies overlooking the Inn's wildflower field, and Room 1 has a private entrance. The Whalewalk Inn also offers in-season discounts (a rarity) for honeymooners. $160–$325 nightly.

OLD INN ON THE GREEN & GEDNEY FARM

Route 57, New Marlborough (800-286-3139). www.oldinn.com. 2.5–3 hours from Boston.

Well known as a beautiful site for wedding ceremonies and receptions, the Old Inn on the Green is equally desirable for a honeymoon. Two Normandy-style barns and a restored inn and manor house are nestled in the rolling hills of the old Berkshire village of New Marlborough. Honeymooners have several options for romantic accommodations. Gedney Farm has 16 rooms, some with four-poster beds, granite fireplaces, whirlpools and glass ceilings. A grand terrace spans the back of Gedney Manor, and most of its 12 rooms have stunning views to the southwest. (The manor's Room 507 has a king-size bed and the original period fireplace.) Thayer House, located on the New Marlborough village green, has six rooms with lavish fabrics, whirlpool or clawfoot tubs, separate showers, and fireplaces. and looks out to a courtyard terrace and pool. Newlyweds receive Champagne in their suite or with dinner in one of the dining rooms. $185–$365 nightly.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE INN AT THORN HILL

Thorn Hill Road, Jackson Village (603-383-4242). www.innatthornhill.com. 3 hours from Boston.

After being closed more than a year for an extensive overhaul, this getaway in the White Mountains is revamped and refreshed, and two rooms in the Main Inn are particularly well suited to honeymooners. The Presidential Suite includes a gas fireplace, double Jacuzzi, steam shower, king-size bed, wet bar and—best of all—a sweeping view of the mountains. One floor below, the Mount Washington room lends a fairy tale feel with its turret chamber. The inn also offers private cottages among its 25 suites. Couples who choose Thorn Hill's Excursion Honeymoon package ($750 for a two-night stay) find a dozen red roses, a half bottle of Champagne and a fruit and cheese basket in their room when they arrive. The package also includes four meals: a candlelit three-course dinner in the dining room (or as room service), two full country breakfasts in bed with fresh flowers, and a picnic lunch for two, with sandwiches, cookies and fruit. In summer, the Excursion Honeymoon comes with a canoe trip down the Saco River with a picnic lunch and a bottle of wine. In winter, newlyweds can enjoy the fresh air à la Doctor Zhivago, by curling up under a blanket with some Champagne for a private one-horse open sleigh ride. $125–$340 nightly. IB

BATTLE OF THE brides

IT'S EVERY WOMAN FOR HERSELF AT THE FILENE'S BASEMENT BRIDAL GOWN SALE

BY JULIE SURATT

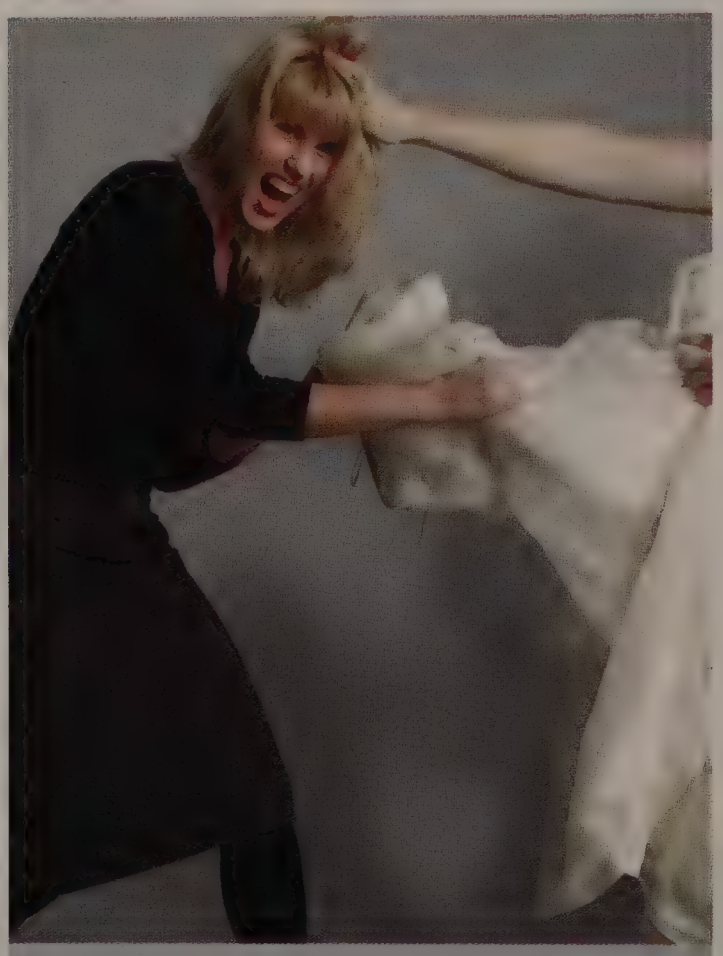
PHOTOGRAPHED BY BILL STREICHER

Ladies, in five minutes, I'm going to open these doors and walk everyone to the escalator. The operative word is walk." So says the Filene's Basement employee with the dubious honor of being here at 8 am to open the floodgates to the store's semiannual Bridal Gown Sale. "Also, we have a few rules: Don't push each other. The last thing you want is a broken arm on your wedding day. And please share."

Alas, only 50 or so women can hear his warnings, as the line of nearly a thousand brides-to-be (or wannabes) snakes up the stairs and down Summer Street. Fortunately, as the first woman in line, I hear him loud and clear.

I have risen before dawn on this Friday morning in February, hopped on the T to Downtown Crossing and worked my way up to the front of the line, interviewing women who have queued up in front of the store. All are eager to snag one of the designer wedding dresses (which typically sell for thousands of dollars) on sale today at Filene's for a mere $249.

Audra Shulman of Danvers—her fists enclosed in fire engine red boxing gloves—is third in line, having arrived at 6:45 am. Intimidated by her menacing glare, I quickly reassure her that I'm a reporter on assignment and not shopping for myself. Good, she says, "because I'm prepared to use these gloves in case anyone gets in my way." But how will she try on dresses wearing boxing gloves? "Oh, I'm just here for reinforcement," she says. It's actually Shulman's twin sister, Stacey, who's getting married at the end of August. "But if someone has a dress she likes, watch out," says Audra.



Stacey, as it turns out, is waiting down the block at the other entrance. In order to cover more ground, she's brought her mother and two friends (both Stacey's size, so they can model dresses). They have whistles around their necks and code words—which they refuse to tell me—to shout out if they find the perfect dress. How will they know when they've found it? "The first tear we shed, that's the one," says Shulman's mother.

Most of the women are dressed in layers, with tights and tank tops under their jeans and sweaters so they can maintain some modesty as they try on gowns. Luckily, there aren't that many men around. Sam, friend of Brighton bride-to-be Carol Cullati, is one of the few exceptions. "I trust his sense of fashion," says Cullati. "Plus, he can beat off all the other girls."

Some of the women in line are novices; others are in their second or third year of searching. Some are engaged; others don't even have intendeds. Some know exactly what they want ("off-the-shoulders," "not too princessy"); others will take what they can get. All have the same plan: to run in and grab as many dresses as they can and then retreat to a corner to try them on.

As 8 am approaches, the crowd, high on adrenaline and coffee, becomes more animated. I look up the stairs and see a handful of women in bright orange T-shirts that read "Team Bandetti." Other groups sport baseball caps, or headbands with fuzzy antennae—anything to make them easier to spot from a distance.

I ask a foursome—Amy, Taryn, Catherine and Elizabeth—for advice (two are repeat customers) and end up befriending them. They show me their engagement rings,

IF YOU'RE GOING TO THE FILENE'S BASEMENT SALE:

- Wear tights and a snug-fitting tank top under your clothes. Keep in mind that TV crews may be covering the event.
- Bring as many friends as you can find. A caveat: Married friends won't end up competing with you for dresses.
- Leave your coat and purse at home. They weigh you down.
- Don't wear makeup—it could ruin the dress.
- Get there before 7 am.
- Go with an open mind. Sleeves can be removed, sizes altered.

and eventually one of them notices the diamond ring on my left hand (a coincidence, I swear!). "So why aren't you shopping for yourself?" one asks. Um, I hadn't really thought of it. (I had just gotten engaged the week before.) "You should at least try," they say. I look around and realize that as the first person in line, I'm the envy of hundreds of women. "Hmm," I say, "I really should, right?" But only for the sake of accurate reporting, of course.

So at 8 am, when the doors open, I follow the Filene's employee to the top of the escalator and then sprint down. Thousands of dresses hang on long racks. There's no organization, just dress after dress in varying styles and sizes. I grab as many as I can hold. With six dresses wrapped around my neck, shoulders and arms, I retreat to a corner beside my new buddies. Women are shouting everywhere. Within 60 seconds, literally every dress has been pulled off the rack. Women are still streaming down the escalator, but all the dresses have been claimed, at least temporarily.

I hang my gowns on a post and strip down to my bra and underwear to start trying them on. Unlucky women who were too late to find a dress start prowling around like sharks, waiting for rejects. One woman tries to grab one of my gowns off the hook, and I have to chase her off.

I'm a size 4, and most of the dresses are at least 8 or 10, so I have to imagine how each dress will look when it's fitted properly. I pass my rejects on to my new friends and receive a few in exchange. One dress—strapless, off-white, with a beaded top and straight bottom, and no crinoline—looks like it could be a keeper, but I'm not convinced until five different women approach me and ask to have it if I don't end up buying it. It's a size 12, but it's simple and less princessy than many of the dresses I've seen. No, I'm keeping it for now, I say.

I grab a few of the dresses that I don't want but suspect others might and start walking around. It's time to barter. "I'll trade you this size 10, white long-sleeve for that sleeveless," I say. Some women are agreeable; others sneer and turn away. There's one gown I really want, but the woman who holds it won't even consider any of the dresses I have. I trade a few of my dresses for others and reapproach her. "No, I'm not trading," she says. Meanwhile, the gowns start to get heavy in my arms, but I don't want to put them down, for fear they'll be taken. I try on the strapless again and ask my new friends what they think, and one says, "Take it."

So I do. At 9 am, one hour after starting my unplanned-for search, I'm finished. I leave behind a scene of mayhem: hundreds of women in various states of undress shouting out things like, "Searching for a size 8 off-white!" I buy the dress—originally on sale for $2,700 at Yolanda boutique—for $249 plus tax. What a bargain. Of course, making a size 12 dress fit a 5-foot-10-inch, size 4 body involves serious alterations—including dividing the dress into a bustier and skirt, to lengthen it—and costs an additional $350. But when I try it on a few months later, after all the refitting's done, it carries a unique sense of victory. iB

Julie Suratt, married last summer, went to the February 2003 Filene's Basement Bridal Gown Sale. This winter's sale takes place Feb. 20. Doors open at 8 am, and all dresses are $249.

MOPSY

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

HAVE YOU HEARD ABOUT THE BOSTON STRANGLER?

A reporter and nephew of one of the Boston Strangler's victims turns up a different story in A Rose for Mary.

In January 1964, the last of the Boston Strangler's victims, Mary Sullivan, was murdered at 44A Charles Street. Fourteen months later, Albert DeSalvo, incarcerated on unrelated sex offenses, claimed to be the strangler, making confessions that were rich in detail but often counter to the facts. DeSalvo's strutting attorney, F. Lee Bailey, and politically ambitious then-senator Edward Brooke—both of whom stood to gain on book deals if DeSalvo was "proven" to be the killer—were content to see DeSalvo found guilty. Decades later, Sullivan's nephew, WBZ reporter Casey Sherman, became intent on finding his aunt's real killer. His exciting, looping quest makes for a fascinating book. Players include Sherman, his mother and countless relatives of the murdered. The DeSalvo family also cooperated with Sherman in attempting to disprove Albert's guilt, forming a touching common bond. Attorney General Tom Reilly resisted Sherman's years-long efforts. But grisly exhumations of DeSalvo (killed in prison) and Sullivan, DNA evidence and taped phony confessions seem to point away from DeSalvo. Sherman's story is zestily motivated, and the good and bad guys are often flip-flopped. The denouement is scary, though the case, lacking a blood sample, remains open.

HOUSE CALLS FOR THE BELOVED CRITTERS

Doggie Day helps take care of your pets at your home when you're away. Call 617-426-7387, or visit www.doggieday.com.

There are no tender anxieties—short of the well-being of one's children—to rival worries about who will take care of your dog/cat/ferret/parakeet when you're away. When neighbors fail (and most neighbors don't deliver Doggie Day levels of attention anyway), this highly professionalized service is a reliable comfort. As it happens, 80 percent of what Doggie Day touchingly calls its "clients" are actually cats. Become a member for $29, and after an at-home get-to-know-pooch (or tabby) visit, you can call on Doggie Day to come over once, twice, even three times a day to feed your pet. Services include the delicate, crucial procedures like giving shots, subcutaneous liquids and pills. They'll even clean litter boxes and aquariums. Professionalism is part of the package—Doggie Day employees wear uniforms and drive company vehicles. Once you've signed up, you can call in a panicked emergency from the airport and they'll leap into action. Best of all, they'll do vet visits—both prearranged or on an emergency basis. Your animal's needs are customized; dogs can be walked solo or with a group. Dogs of a feather flock together, and animals of different sizes and incompatible personalities are kept apart.

THE WEATHER OUTSIDE: FRIGHTFUL; GAS FIRE: DELIGHTFUL

Black Magic, at 21 New St. in Cambridge, sells gas, electric and wood stoves and fireplaces for heat. Call 617-876-4456.

Black Magic sells lovely, rustic, wood-burning stoves, the kind that bring flickerings of Vermont into your living room in their chubby little metal containers. But as the shop's Bill Bornheimer says, "Gas is king." Compared with natural gas, wood is less controllable, involves chores of lugging and ash disposal, and can pose problems for asthmatics. The gas heaters at Black Magic look downright wood-stovey, screened by glass, with imitation logs or glowing coals perched beneath merrily dancing flames. Along with hypnotic beauty and, of course, heat, these stoves add significant value to a house or apartment. Gorgeous, silvery cast metal pieces look plausibly antique. Various venting options are available, including tapping into an existing chimney or whisking fumes outside through a pipe. In addition to freestanding stoves, Black Magic carries gas, wood and electric "fireplaces," which are built into the wall like the real thing. Set inside one of the Black Magic's beautiful mantel adornments, a gas fireplace can lend an estate-like dignity to a room.

BACK IN BLACKFIN

Tony Ambrose brings his Hingham-based Blackfin Chop House and Raw Bar to Boston

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

When Anthony Ambrose announced several months ago that he was closing his Huntington Avenue restaurant, Ambrosia, and reopening it as the Blackfin Chop House and Raw Bar, I had mixed feelings. Ambrosia had long been a beacon, attracting discriminating Boston diners with creatively conceived and professionally executed cuisine that did justice to its name, a play on the owner's last name. At the same time, its physical appointments and decor, which many likened—not as a compliment—to a luxurious hotel lobby, were reflected in its aggressive prices.

The makeover of Ambrosia into the Blackfin Chop House and Raw Bar—a name it shares with Ambrose's highly regarded restaurant in Hingham—addresses both of these issues. First, Ambrose has totally renovated the space, creating a veritable shrine to deep-sea fishing. A huge tuna coffin, trimmed with shiny anodized aluminum and accompanied by a massive block-and-tackle apparatus, dominates the dining room, together with a floor-to-ceiling wine storage tower. The restaurant has two bars—one with television sets, in the cocktail area to the left of the entrance, and the other along one wall in the main dining room, where a dozen high-back stools accommodate diners rather than drinkers. Walls of midnight blue reach to the enormously high ceiling. A large black-framed mirror and colorful prints adorn the walls, but the major decorative artifacts are a half dozen sturdy tuna poles and reels that protrude from mounts around the dining room.

Blackfin's tables are dressed in crisp, white napery, with substantial tableware, hefty steak knives and handsome glassware. In welcome contrast to so many restaurants, even tables for two are of sufficient size, so that the bread basket does not crowd out the wine. (The only downside is the minimal space between tables, which makes private conversation difficult and impedes easy access by the wait staff.)

In addition to transforming his restaurant's design and decor, Ambrose has modified its prices. Appetizers, soups and salads range from $7 to $14, while main courses start below $20. On one evening I began with a generous portion of fried calamari ($10) served with two sauces, a sweet and spicy red pepper vinaigrette and a piquant aioli laced with capers and anchovies. Lightly breaded and quickly fried in fresh oil, the calamari had a wonderfully clean, crisp flavor, which the toothsome dipping sauces enhanced. Unfortunately, the dish arrived at table lukewarm, and some of the larger pieces bordered on tough. A second appetizer, the Maryland crab cake ($11), could have served as a main course given its ample size, over four inches across and almost two inches high. Its light, almost delicate texture and high proportion of sweet, delicious crabmeat profited from the pleasantly herbed breading. Tomato, horseradish and cilantro salad provided an excellent garnish.

Less successful than the individual appetizers was the Blackfin platter ($22 for two), consisting of four oysters, four clams, four pieces of sashimi and a small toasted slice of French bread topped with eggplant-pepper salad. While the briny oysters were first-rate in their shimmering freshness—save for an errant shell fragment in one of them—the cherrystones promised by the menu turned out to be tiny littlenecks. Though delightfully sweet, they were so small as to provide little more than a taste. The sashimi slices were also terrific as far as they went, which was not very far. Finally, the eggplant and pepper salad bruschetta, a mélange of al dente, julienned strips of red and yellow peppers and eggplant, would have been much better had it not been refrigerator cold, and I thought it odd that this platter for two contained one small slice of this well-conceived bruschetta.

The main course selections achieved a uniformly high standard. Jumbo shrimp scampi ($24), that ubiquitous oxymoron, brought five large, perfectly textured shrimp in a lemony sauce, accompanied by creamy lemon risotto studded with slices of yellow and red grape tomatoes. Three luscious spears of tender sautéed asparagus, which I chose to regard as an early harbinger of spring as I looked out at pedestrians coping with Boston's frigid January temperatures, crowned the dish. Pan-roasted monkfish loin ($23), an enormous piece of firm-fleshed fish served with its spine intact but otherwise perfectly boned, came with a refreshingly light sauce of lemon and herbs. Accompaniments included fresh, flavorful, al dente green and yellow beans and a generous mound of delicious creamed spinach made with whole rather than chopped leaves. The other garnish, scalloped potatoes, boasted a flavorful cheese and bread-crumb topping, browned under the broiler, but the potatoes themselves seemed bland. I suspected I'd been recognized when our waiter asked whether I'd like the potatoes served separately rather than on the plate with the fish and vegetables. Gratified that someone had finally heeded my long and frequent lament about how so many restaurants layer food high on a plate in muddled heaps, I welcomed with satisfaction the potatoes' arrival in a small ramekin.

On a subsequent visit, the roasted cod loin ($23) turned out to be one of the best pieces of cod I have tasted in some time. The firm, flaky flesh, enhanced by a felicitously herbed bread crumb topping, was superb. Service of the garnishes, however, reverted to form, as garlic mashed potatoes were heaped together with the beans and creamed spinach—standard accompaniments to Blackfin's main courses—in a typical fashion that obscured and diminished their individual merits.

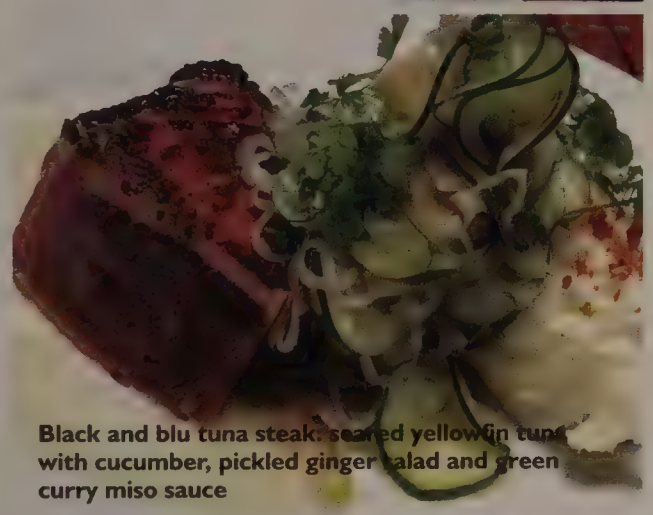
While the maritime theme and decor of the restaurant led me to concentrate on its seafood offerings, I wasn't disappointed when I moved to the chop side of the menu. The whimsically named "pig chop" ($20) represented a remarkable bargain at the price, and the moist, tender goodness of this double-thick cut of pork, grilled medium rare as ordered, satisfied my carnivorous urge. The accompanying bourbon-whipped sweet potatoes, while rich and satisfying, evidenced little in the way of bourbon flavor, and again, they were layered and mushed together on the plate with the other vegetable garnishes.



Blackfin's dessert selections, enjoyable if not outstanding—an adjective our enthusiastic waiter applied to virtually every selection we made—included an oversized molten chocolate cake ($7.95). A cylinder about five inches in diameter and one inch high—easily twice the size typically served as a restaurant dessert—profited from caramel and chocolate sauce swirled around its plate, while a small scoop of vanilla ice cream, taking the place of the espresso ice cream usually featured, further helped to alleviate the cake's slight dryness. Deep-dish apple tart with cinnamon streusel and bourbon sauce ($6.95) combined sweet-tart cubes of al dente apples with a tender crust. Again, the promised bourbon flavor seemed AWOL.

Blackfin's wine list, in contrast with its food prices, fetches aggressive tariffs, with no red wine priced under $30 per bottle. However, the perfectly delightful La Villa Prosecco ($22), an off-dry sparkle from Italy, proved a remarkable bargain, adding a festive note to dinner. Wines by the glass included one of my favorites, Beaulieu Rutherford cabernet sauvignon ($8), a consistent, well-structured Napa red, as well as a full-bodied shiraz, Kirrallaa Bushbines from Australia's Claire Valley ($7). While these prices were thoroughly reasonable, the pours were a tad skimpy.

Service at Blackfin varied from excellent early one evening in the beginning of the week to harried and a little disorganized on a subsequent, busier weekday. As noted earlier, on my first visit the waiter was attentive and efficient, offering the special treatment for the potato garnish. And while I assumed his diligence was due to my being recognized as a restaurant reviewer, my wife noted that he seemed equally attentive to all the diners within his jurisdiction. Only his frequent use of the modifier "outstanding" disconcerted, since he applied it indiscriminately to choices ranging from truly excellent to satisfactory, diminishing his credibility. On the other hand, if a waiter does not display enthusiasm for what he is bringing to the table, he should probably find another line of work. Fortunately, most of Blackfin's food warrants enthusiasm, making it a worthy successor to Ambrosia. iB

Battle Hmmm of the Republique

Suit hits the Pho…V-Day brunch… Moo-mentum

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

First came the letter from a New York attorney's office informing Pho Republique owner Jack Bardy that his restaurant was infringing on the trademark of the attorney's client, a restaurant called Republic. Bardy shrugged off the order to "cease and desist."

Now a federal lawsuit has been filed, and Bardy, who's planning to open a Shanghai-themed eatery in Cambridge in March, has a very full plate indeed.

He says he has no idea what prompted the legal action ("There are a lot of restaurants with 'republic' in the name," he says) and that even though the New York Republic serves Asian food, "if you tried the food there, you wouldn't confuse the two places. It's a very mediocre operation: Asian fast-food."

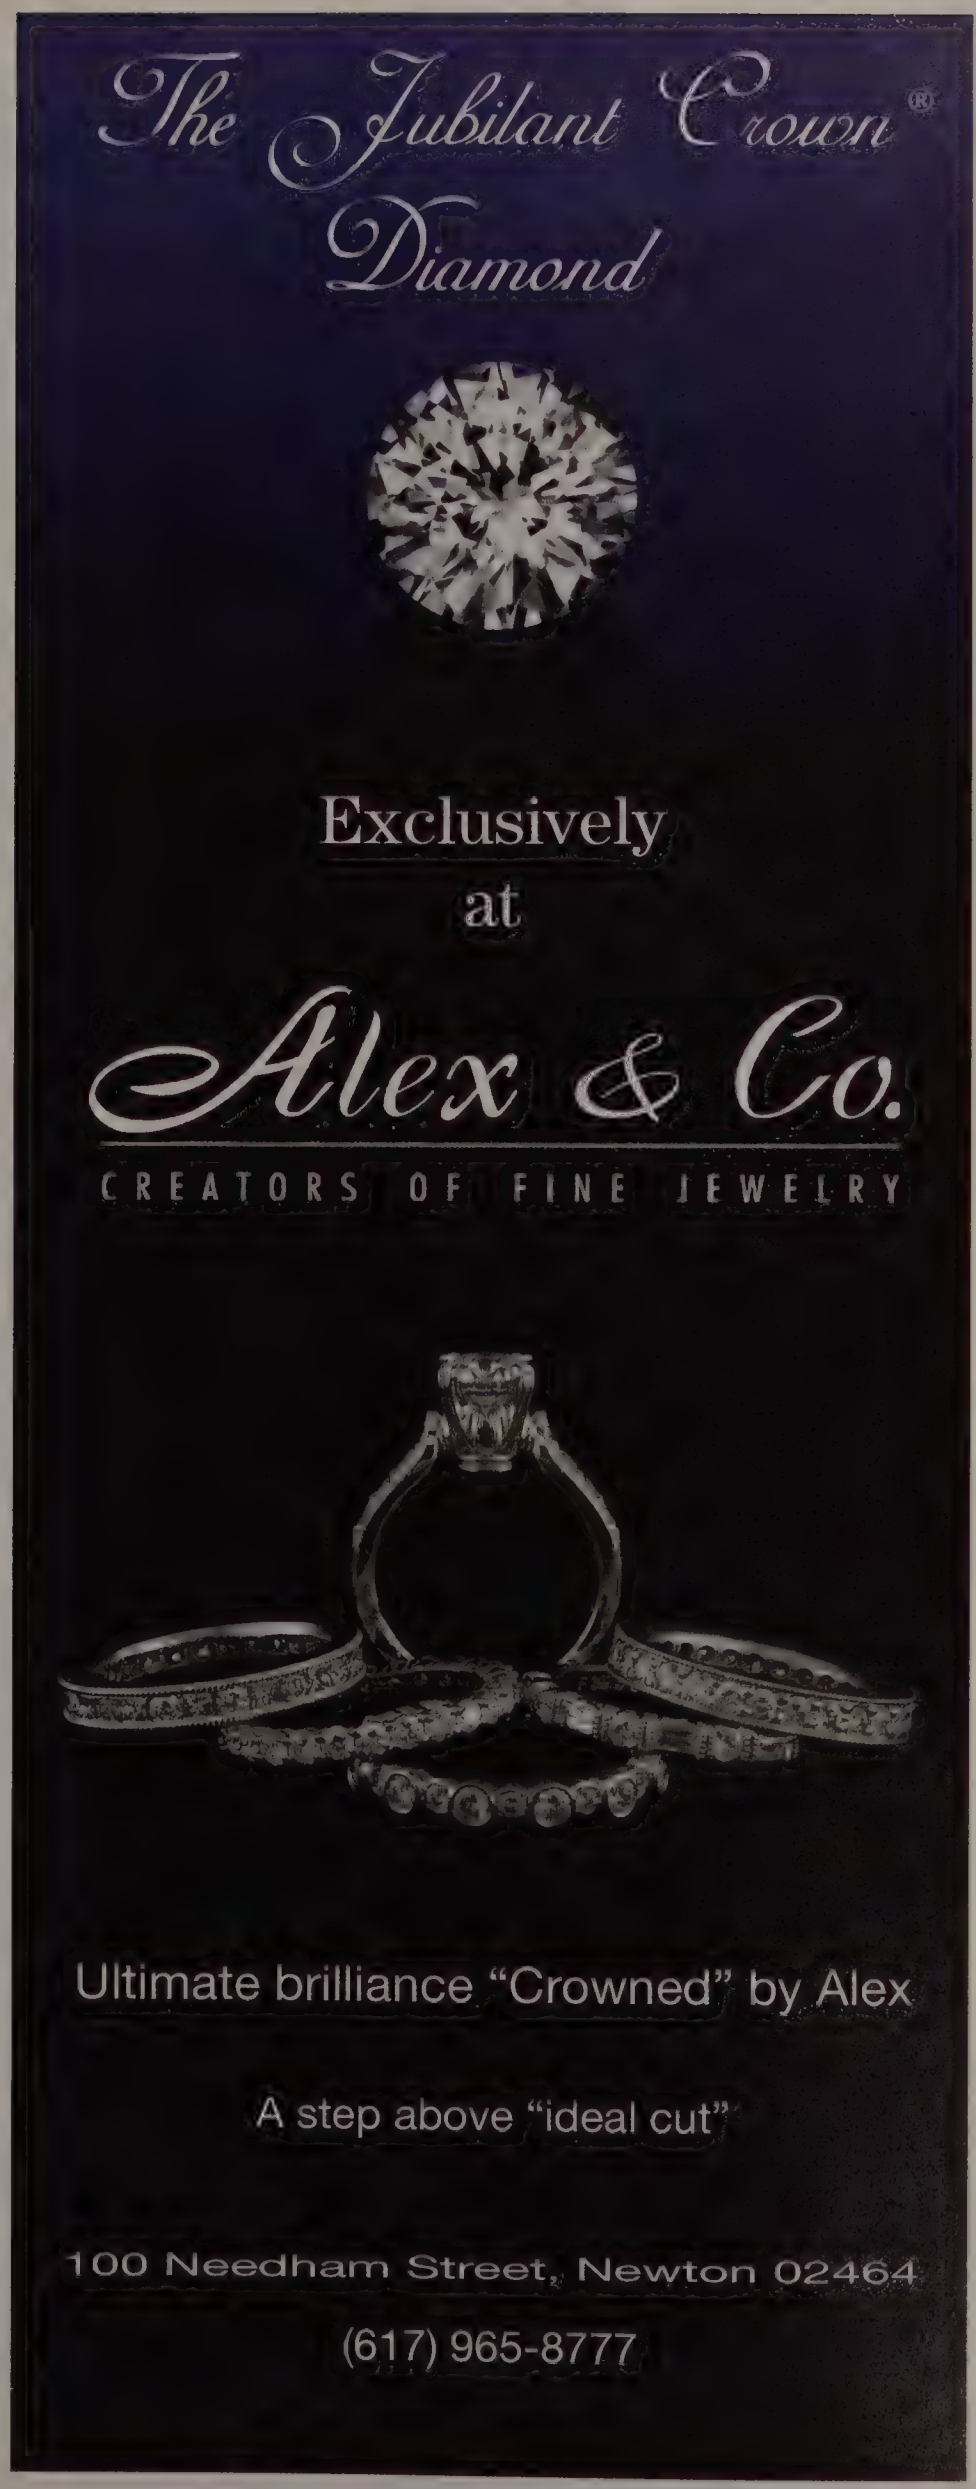
Bardy is readying himself to go to court, if necessary. "I'm going to defend the good name of Pho Republique," he says. "Let's do it. I'm ready for a good fight."

We'll keep you posted. Meanwhile, calls to Republic's lawyer in Manhattan were not returned. And although a local attorney familiar with trademark law says that at first glance the suit is "very aggressive and perhaps untenable," he adds that it's "hard to evaluate without seeing the allegations."

Will Jack Bardy have to change his restaurant's name?

SECOND COURSE

For years, L'Espalier has been one of the city's top-rated venues for a romantic dinner. Now, appropriately starting on Valentine's Day weekend, chef/owner Frank McClelland is also offering a Sunday brunch menu. If your romance lingers past sunrise, put away the prepackaged English muffins and treat yourself to deluxe dishes such as baked Wellfleet oysters on the half shell in Meyer lemon and salsify custard, with chervil and Iranian Ossetra caviar. That's just for starters; other first courses include smoked trout with onion, Comte cheese and spinach tart with Aunt Midge's sauce, and duck sausage, maple baked beans and house-smoked bacon with a corn fritter. If the prix fixe option seems like too much commitment too soon, you can order à la carte.



Troquet, the Theater District restaurant best known for the carefully paired wine and food items on its menu, is adding a new partnership to the mix. Chef Scott Hebert and pastry chef Natalia Andalo, who are married, are now partners in the business with original owners Chris and Diane Campbell. After almost three years, Troquet is expanding, adding a 50-seat dining room on the second floor. The downstairs space has been revamped as a lounge area, offering a full bar with creative cocktails and a menu of small plates seven days a week.

Delayed gratification: If you're thinking "lobster pizza" for lunch, hold that thought till dinnertime. In the fall, Excelsior started to serve a limited lunch menu in the downstairs bar area, hoping to draw clientele from business and residential neighbors. Ridiculously cold weather and a lack of foot traffic led the restaurant to reconsider, and so the doors are closed until spring, when lunch plans will be reevaluated.

Caffeinated carnivores: In Seattle, a steakhouse is featuring a dish of filet mignon coated with Starbucks espresso grounds. Will any of Boston's steakhouses pick up on the trend? IB

WINE

Gift of Grape

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

The first time somebody gave me a bottle of wine as a gift I thought, "That's pretty cool." I didn't know much about wine at the time, but the present made a definite impression. After unwrapping the bottle, I put it away, assuming it would only get better and better as all wines do the longer you save them. Wrong! I mistakenly carted my treasure, a modest Entre Deux Mers, from apartment to apartment until the right moment arrived and then, with great fanfare, uncorked what turned out to be nothing more than expensive vinegar, brownish in color and sherry-like in flavor. The lesson: Wine's a great gift, but the giver should help out the recipient with some information.

Now I almost always give wine, I guess because it's expected of me. But there are lots of reasons wine is an ideal gift choice. For one thing, you might benefit at some point by being able to enjoy the present with the person you're giving it to. Secondly, you can avoid the last-minute "What should I get?" scramble if you buy a case of something you like and then dole it out, bottle by bottle, as gift-giving occasions arise. Third, if you introduce your recipient to a bottle that's hip and obscure, it says a lot about your taste for the finer things. (Just make sure to include "how to" instructions regarding when you drink it and with what.) Last of all, for the biggies that can leave your checkbook bleeding (weddings, anniversaries and other such occasions), sticking to the wine solution can cut your shopping time as well as your bill significantly.

Let's get specific. If you're giving a wine that you hope might be enjoyed over a long period of time, then you need to choose from a vintage that has aging potential. Ask your retailer for a bottle, or a case, that's expected to improve over time. (If you're looking for a bottle from a meaningful year that will touch the recipient because of a shared memory or a significant event, you might be less fussy about its developmental potential.)

Buying older wine is always tricky because of uncertainty about how it has been stored and shipped before you get your hands on it. You're better off giving something current and including instructions about its estimated peak drinking time frame. The great thing nowadays is that there are so many wines that taste good now but will continue to improve over time. A number of recent vintages have achieved iconic status in the past few years, such as 2000 Bordeaux and 1997 brunello, but these don't represent great value because they've been hyped so aggressively that everyone wants them. Here's my short list of recent vintages to consider when selecting a wine gift that you want the recipient to enjoy in the future:

2001 Bordeaux. The vintage would be more famous if it didn't follow 2000, which, despite economic woes and anti-French sentiment, caused a buying frenzy. The good thing is that prices are considerably lower for comparable wines than in 2000. The wines get interesting starting at about $25, and the good ones can age at least another 10 years.

2001 California cabernet sauvignon. Ripe, big and full-bodied, with earlier accessibility than Bordeaux of the same year. The only downside is that prices, unaccountably, have not moderated much. But you can generally find your favorite Napa or Sonoma heavyweight if you look hard enough. Expect to pay $30 to infinity for an ageworthy bottle. Many of these will continuing developing for decades if stored properly.

2002 red Burgundy. A return to form that rivals the super 1999s at prices that are actually lower. Stick with the big-name premier and grand crus (starting at about $40) and you can expect them to age beautifully for up to 15 years.

1998 Brunello di Montalcino. The 1998 Tuscans were no slouch, even in comparison with the incomparable 1997s. In fact the 1998s are even a bit better structured for the long haul. Tough to appreciate young, these are bottles for the cellar, and you'll have to shell out $60 and up. But your patience will be rewarded if you can resist drinking the wine for up to 15 years.

2000 vintage port. This is a great gift because it's so sturdy and can age practically indefinitely. Very ripe year, beautifully lush forward fruit. Prices are not cheap: $50 for the no-names, $100 for the blue chips.

2002 German riesling. Ageworthy whites? These are, particularly from great estates in the Mosel-Saar-Ruwer and Rheingau. The wines are so agreeable early, you wouldn't think so, but a good spätlese has 10 years ahead of it at a minimum. The only caveat: Cool storage is essential. The cost: $20 to $150 depending on the quality you want.

2002 Chilean reds. Yes, you can age wines from Chile and they will get better, trust me. This may be one of the finest vintages on record, and the wines are a steal, as in $15 for a beautiful bottle with a five- to seven-year life span. IB

Curtis Eller, the angry, yodeling banjo player

Curtis Eller is known as the angry, yodeling banjo player who sings songs about pigeon racing and Jesus. If that's not enough to pique your interest, Eller (a former juggler and acrobat) is touring with his oddball band, the American Circus, who usually play at burlesque shows and vaudeville revues but have also performed at funerals and horse-races. Eller and the American Circus show off their curious blend of waltzes, polkas and carnival music on a double bill with the local, kitschy string band Reverend Glasseye and his Wooden Legs—a guaranteed interesting evening. *Middle East Upstairs, 472-480 Mass. Heart Attack

Men, you may not be aware of this, but Valentine's Day falls on a Saturday this year. Not only that, it's a three-day weekend for many of us, thanks to President's Day on Feb. 16. If that plants a seed of creativity in your mind—something along the lines of, Maybe I should plan an overnight at a bed-and-breakfast in Vermont—think again. By the time you read this, all rooms at cozy inns will have been booked (and most have three-night minimums anyway). However, there are a handful of fun activities you can do in the city that aren't booked. Here are a few: Laugh aloud with funnygal Wendy Liebman at the Comedy Connection. Limber up at a special Valentine's Day partner yoga class at the Baron Baptiste Power Yoga Institute. Get in the mood by watching Casablanca at the Brattle Theatre. Or catch the Lizard Lounge's Valentine's Day show, starring Anngelle Wood, Chroma, the Kitty Kill, Starla Dear, Sugabomb and Drab. If none of these options appeal, you could always buy flowers (they don't have to be roses!), light some candles, order takeout Thai and snuggle up on the couch with a rental. She'll appreciate that you thought of it yourself.

Performing Arts: Wonder Women

A couple of years ago, Eve Ensler came to town with her blush-inspiring play The Vagina Monologues, which featured excerpts from interviews with more than 200 women around the world about, yup, their vaginas, among other womanly concerns. The Obie Award–winning show, which doubles as tribute to women and their sexuality, is back, and this time it also doubles as a fund-raiser to prevent violence against women. The production features prominent local women offering testimony to the fairer sex. Among the stars are Marjorie O'Neill Clapprood, former state rep and now president of Marjorie O'Neill Clapprood Associates; Terry Hamilton, wife of Aerosmith bassist, Tom; Joanne Chang, chef/owner of Flour Bakery; Patti Kraft, wife of the New England Patriots' vice chairman, Jonathan; Barbara Ito, local president of the American Federation of Radio and Television Artists; and WCVB co-anchor Susan Wornick. Proceeds benefit the Second Step Inc., which provides transitional programming for survivors of domestic violence and their children. John Hancock Hall, 180 Berkeley St., Boston (617-965-2026). 7:30 pm. $150-$350.

Leonard Lite

The Big Bounce is less filling, but still tasty

BY PAUL SHERMAN

The Big Bounce is no Out of Sight or Get Shorty. Elmore Leonard wrote the novel back in 1969, before he'd quite found the distinctive thriller/comedy voice that resulted in those memorable 1990s books and movie adaptations. So it's no surprise that, like the book on which it's based, The Big Bounce feels flimsy next to more stylish, substantial Leonard movies. Its central crime scheme feels halfhearted, its colorful supporting cast sometimes doesn't get the screen time it deserves and its ending is iffy. But it's also no surprise that second-tier Leonard is more entertaining than most other movies.

Owen Wilson and Sara Foster star in the breezy new comedy The Big Bounce.

Maybe The Big Bounce is a mild success because it doesn't pretend to be anything more than a breezy lark. Director George Armitage and screenwriter Sebastian Gutierrez (Judas Kiss) have moved the action from Michigan to Hawaii, and the laid-back sun-and-surf setting certainly offers the appropriate tone for the story (and the appropriate fantasy escape destination for chilled Bostonians). Like the Oahu waves rolling into the shore, Jack Ryan (Owen Wilson) has drifted to Hawaii, in his case for the surf and the occasional con. Jack might be too shortsighted ever to get ahead in life, but Wilson's performance gives him enough charm to keep the viewer interested. Although he's not too smart, he's got the sense to realize that fact, and that's where much of his charm comes from, especially when the movie opens with Jack's amusing voice-over about his old pals "bad luck and bad choices."

Every good beach bum like Jack needs a sun bunny, and The Big Bounce has a great one in Nancy (newcomer Sara Foster). The willowy, bikini-friendly blond catches Jack's eye, but she's already the mistress of shady hotel developer Ray Ritchie (Gary Sinise). Bad girl Nancy claims she loves Ray, but she also wants to entice Jack into helping her steal $200,000 from Ray's safe. Although wizened Walter (Morgan Freeman), the local judge and bungalow-motel owner with whom Jack gets a job, keeps telling him that Nancy is bad news, Jack's hormones keep telling him to stick close to Nancy.

Or at least as close as Nancy will let him get. Nancy is no mere femme fatale, and Foster's poised performance treads a tricky line. Her Nancy is naughty but not slutty, and fun-loving but not a bimbo. In one of the movie's best sequences, she keeps Jack occupied in an upstairs living room and Charlie Sheen's dim Bob Jr., a foreman in Ray's company whom she needs to befriend as part of the robbery scheme, occupied in the downstairs living room. She's leading them both on with temptation, yet totally in control of the situation (and her peek-a-boo outfits).

At moments like that, The Big Bounce stands up to any of the Leonard movies, and director Armitage (Miami Blues, Grosse Pointe Blank) continues to be a master at squeezing comedy from violent situations like the film's opening, in which Jack cold-cocks a construction foreman (Vinnie Jones) with a baseball bat. Armitage isn't afraid to sit back and let his cast take over, either, as in a scene in which Jack and Nancy stroll on the beach in a minutes-long conversation—you really sense the playful chemistry between the characters (and the actors) because it's all filmed in a single shot. Another dose of unadulterated fun comes in a dominoes game featuring Jack, Walter, and characters played by Willie Nelson and Harry Dean Stanton (who are in the movie all too briefly). The relaxed and amusing scene feels as if Armitage just let the camera roll on these four colorful people, and who could blame him?

The less visible effort The Big Bounce exerts, the more it succeeds. That's why the ending, following some twists and turns in the robbery, feels labored. The movie was originally supposed to be in theaters last fall, and you sense there have been some reshoots and re-editing (the movie runs only about 85 minutes). The arbitrary ending feels as if it's one of several shot, and several snippets in the movie's commercials (including Nancy pulling a gun on Jack) are not in the finished film. To paraphrase Spencer Tracy's famous quip, there's not much meat on The Big Bounce, but most of what's there is choice. IB

The Big Bounce ★★★

Along Came Polly ★★
That old Hollywood myth about opposites attra ing gets a serviceable but unremarkable treatmen this Ben Stiller–Jennifer Aniston romantic come He's a risk-averse analyst for an insurance compa whose new wife (Debra Messing) leaves him for other man on their honeymoon; she's a ragamuf who never plans anything in advance. When he h to choose between the two, which TV star will B spend the rest of his life with? This is just the lat in the growing list of "put Ben Stiller in uncomfo able situations" comedies, and unfortunately, often plays more like Duplex than Meet the Paren It's buoyed somewhat by the amusing supporti performances of Philip Seymour Hoffman, A Baldwin and Hank Azaria. (At Boston Commo Fenway and suburbs.)

The Battle of Algiers ★★★½
This 1965 look at the 1950s Algerian uprisi against the French colonials is one of the great do dramas. Now in rerelease, the movie's realism is s bracing and its violence still jarring and disturbi The movie has only become more morally compl over time, as it asks us to sympathize with revolutio aries who, essentially, perform terrorist acts. T movie is also too intense and immediate to co across as preachy, though. (At Kendall Square.)

Big Fish ★★★
Forget about the present-day drama between a bl tery dying Southerner (Albert Finney) and his se estranged grown son (Billy Crudup) in Tim Burto latest. The real action is in the tall tales about t dying man's earlier life. These sequences featuri Ewan McGregor are the first thing anyone will member from this movie. Burton gives these scen an eye-popping heightened reality, while McG gor's lively performance might remind you of a other optimistic dreamer from a Burton movie Johnny Depp's Ed Wood. With his performance a swaggering Camelot-era man-about-town in Do with Love and now this role, McGregor has improb bly shown himself to be a crackerjack portrayer American gumption. The rest of the movie falte but McGregor's scenes are bull's-eyes. (At Bost Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Cold Mountain ★★½
With its romance set against the backdrop of war, female bonding and its overgroomed star, Antho Minghella's adaptation of Charles Frazier's novel one part Last of the Mohicans, one part Fried Gre Tomatoes and one part infomercial for whatever li of cosmetics Nicole Kidman is wearing. By defau this is the best of the season's big dramatic epi clearly besting The Last Samurai and House of Sa and Fog. Much of it works: the budding romance Kidman's and Jude Law's characters interrupted the Civil War, the strife that besets all the chara ters because of the war, the supporting charact played by the likes of Philip Seymour Hoffman, N talie Portman, Ray Winstone and Jack White of t White Stripes. But while Kidman's minister's daug ter has her civilized life collapse around her and g pushed to the brink of starvation and poverty, befo being aided by Renee Zellweger's Ma Kettle–mee Peppermint Patty farmgirl, the actress always loo as if she's made up to go shopping. It's hard to fe her plight in your gut because of it. (At Bost Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Company ★
Robert Altman's drama set within the Joffrey Bal of Chicago is perhaps the veteran director's wo film. There's little attempt to develop the chara ters, conflict is almost nonexistent, and the dan numbers look like a cross between Mummensch and a Fruit of the Loom commercial. Althou many of the company's real dancers play supporti roles, Barbara Turner's script offers no insight in this insular community. The characters, such as t imperious artistic director (Malcolm McDowell) second-tier dancer trying to get to the next lev (Neve Campbell), and her cook boyfriend (Jam Franco), are one-dimensional at best. And Altm inserts most of the dance numbers in seemingly ra dom fashion, without context. (At Kendall Squa and Coolidge Corner.)

The Fog of War ★★★
In Cambridge moviemaker Errol Morris' series of i terviews with former JFK and LBJ secretary of d fense Robert McNamara, the shrewd technocr doesn't unburden himself of any more responsibili for the Vietnam quagmire that occurred under h watch. McNamara is too cagey for that. But Mor finds fertile territory in McNamara's observations human nature, war and politics. (Morris has subt tled the movie "Eleven Lessons from the Life

Jay Hernandez, Martin Henderson and Will Yun Lee star in the high-speed action-adventure Torque.

Robert S. McNamara.") When McNamara talks about the Vietnam effort failing because the American government didn't know enough to empathize with the Vietnamese, it's hard not to think of Iraq. And when McNamara talks about the moral dilemmas of making decisions in times of strife, he sheds light on all the political crossroads that have turned presidents gray. More than a dry Q&A, Fog unfolds in Morris' typically cinematic style, featuring montages of archival footage, cockeyed camera angles and Philip Glass' churning music. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Girl with a Pearl Earring ★★

Based on Tracy Chevalier's novel, this film puts a speculative backdrop tale to Johannes Vermeer's 1660s painting. As director Peter Webber strives to get the Dutch master's lighting and composition just right, his poor characters walk around in a stiff, humorless daze, and the story turns stilted in no time. The movie's Vermeer (Colin Firth) is a garden-variety tortured artist, in this case tormented by his bourgeois wife (Essie Davis) and mother-in-law (Judy Parfitt), who push him to paint more and earn more. His household's new maid (Scarlett Johansson) puts no such demands on him, and the pair start a secret friendship that leads to her posing for the famous portrait. Although the relationships between the sexes and between the classes can be interesting here, the central pair's sexual tension is so laden with pregnant pauses and symbolism (like Vermeer's penetrating piercing of the maid's ears) that this overripe art house melodrama is almost instant self-parody. (At Kendall Square.)

Japanese Story ★★

Nothing like a near-death experience to break the romantic ice. At least that's what this Australian film would have you believe. The geologist (Toni Collette) and the married Japanese businessman (Gotaro Tsunashima) she's assigned to escort to remote mineral mines can't stand each other initially. Then they almost die when their rental car gets stuck in the desert, and once they get it moving it's not long before they're having a fling. The Brief Encounter–like story then goes for an emotional home run that it just can't pull off, because the depth of the relationship never quite convinces. (At Copley Place.)

Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King ★★

Peter Jackson has once again given us an expansive spoof of bombastic, medieval fantasy adventures: the furrowed brows, the swords and sorcery, the creatures, the hair extensions. Oh, that's right, it's not supposed to be silly. Jackson is obviously an imaginative, capable director, but after three movies and seven hours, I still don't care a lick about anything that happens to any of these solemn, solemn people. The LOTR trilogy epitomizes the sort of movie that wins technical Academy Awards but that no one takes seriously. Yet for reasons I just can't understand, a lot of folks have taken these films seriously. (Come on, isn't Tolkien's attractive-human-heroes-versus-ugly-Orc-villains plot just a tad juvenile?). Maybe Jackson can go back to making interesting movies like Heavenly Creatures and Forgotten Silver now. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lost in Translation ★★★½

Sofia Coppola dealt with shared pain in her 2000 directorial debut, The Virgin Suicides, and she conjures up a similar funny-sad tone in her tale of two Americans (Bill Murray, Scarlett Johansson) adrift in Tokyo. He's a washed-up movie star making a bundle endorsing Japanese booze; she's the wife of a work-consumed photographer (Giovanni Ribisi). They're staying at the same hotel and killing time at the same hotel bar, and their misery loves company. The characters make a great movie couple, although their relationship is platonic (with its share of sexual tension). Murray gives a Buster Keaton–like, sad-clown performance built mainly around physical and especially facial reactions to absurd situations, and Johansson is a little heartbreaker. (At Copley Place, Coolidge Corner and suburbs.)

Monster ★★

No matter how hard it tries, and no matter how well Charlize Theron transforms herself into less attractive, much rougher Aileen Wuornos—the prostitute whom Florida executed for killing seven men—this docudrama isn't nearly as sympathetic or as interesting as Aileen Wuornos: The Selling of a Serial Killer, Nick Broomfield's decade-old documentary. In the docudrama, Wuornos is a much-abused woman who decides to try her luck with women after she meets a younger lesbian (Christina Ricci). But with no other way to make money, she keeps hooking, and after a john gets violent, she kills him in self-defense. Then she continues to kill. Although you feel her rage, the movie's Wuornos is a little too dumb to sympathize with (she keeps riding around in her victims' cars), and Theron fails to provide the spark that might make her more fascinating than stupid. The movie also puts all its emotional eggs in the basket of the doomed lesbian affair—which fails to be the riveting tragedy writer-director Patty Jenkins wants it to be. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

My Architect ★★★

Much like last year's The Stone Reader, Nathaniel Kahn's new film is documentary as compelling quest. Kahn's mission is to learn more about his father, architect Louis Kahn. The elder Kahn died in 1974, when Nathaniel was a boy, and it turns out he had three families that he juggled (he remained married to the same woman, while fathering children with two others). The movie's drama is in its depiction of someone who was world-class in his field, yet whose personal life was a farce. The filmmaker struggles to understand how his mother and Louis Kahn's other families could tolerate such a situation, as he, like them, expresses his love for the man. With no easy answers, Kahn is left to look for answers in his father's work, a search that takes him from Philadelphia to Bangladesh. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Shattered Glass ★★★

The story of Stephen Glass, the hotshot New Republic reporter who turned out to have faked most of his articles, becomes a fascinating drama that avoids the usual stodginess of docudramas. Instead of showing us the hows and whys of Glass' fakery—does anyone really know that besides Glass himself?—the movie presents Glass (Hayden Christensen) as an eager-to-please go-getter who appears taken in by his own veneer of guilelessness (and who also appears to be the best co-worker anyone could have). That self-deception may be the biggest and most interesting deceit in the movie, which also touches upon entertainment's dangerous, seductive power over journalism. The strong supporting cast includes Peter Saarsgard, Chloe Sevigny, Hank Azaria and Melanie Lynskey. (At Kendall Square and Copley Place.)

The Statement ★½

Director Norman Jewison reconfigures the Holocaust drama as a popcorn thriller in this 1990s-set film about the search for a French collaborator with the Nazis who's being shielded by a secret society within the Vatican. It works for the first half hour but then quickly falls apart. The casting of Michael Caine (as the collaborator) and other Brits as Frenchmen comes off oddly, as does the script's inability to get specific about the intrigue within the church. It ends up turning a story inspired by truth into the most generic movie villainy. (At Kendall Square.)

Torque ★

The ads tout that Torque is from the producers of The Fast and the Furious, xXx and S.W.A.T. That's something to brag about? This shameless heap of obnoxious behavior and product placement is even worse than seen in those. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

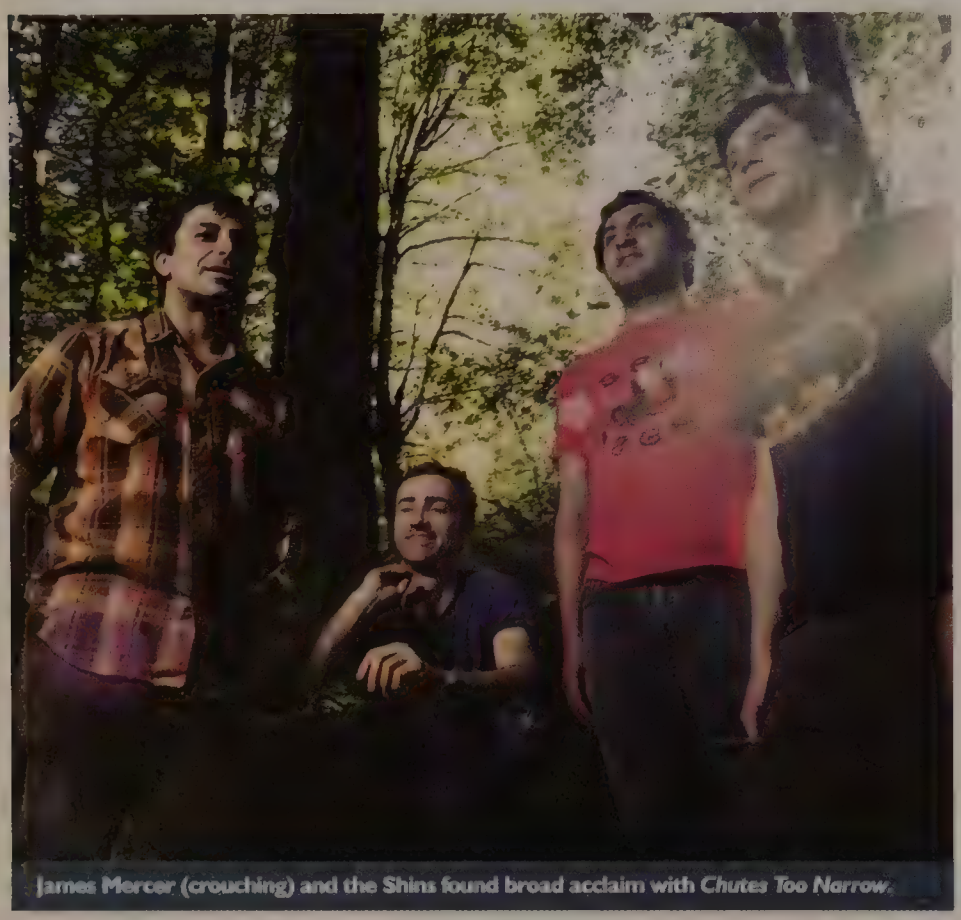
Chutes and Ladders



The Shins climb to the top of the critical heap with an indie-pop masterpiece

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Not many years ago, James Mercer was an aspiring singer-guitarist in Albuquerque, N.M., where he worked in glass and ceramic factories.

"It was nicer than turning bolts," says Mercer, whose band the Shins released its 2001 debut, Oh, Inverted World, on the Sub Pop label. "I remember thinking, 'I'm going to push real hard to do something good here, and if this doesn't work, I'm going back to school and get some kind of career going.'"

Mercer is too busy to worry about that now, touring behind the Shins' second full-length release, Chutes Too Narrow, an indie-pop masterpiece named one of 2003's top 10 albums by publications from Entertainment Weekly to The New Yorker. And the Shins have left the smaller stages of the Middle East and T.T. the Bear's to headline the Roxy Feb. 13.

James Mercer (crouching) and the Shins found broad acclaim with Chutes Too Narrow.

"It's an incredible change, especially when I think of starting in Albuquerque, recording the first record in our bedrooms and basements," says Mercer, on the phone from New York the day after the band's performance on The Late Show with David Letterman.

Back in those bedroom days, Mercer first realized the group's potential after the band Modest Mouse invited them on tour. The Shins burned a five-song EP to sell at gigs. "That was when Napster was at its peak, and suddenly we were all over the place," Mercer says. "People were finding out about us."

Next came their record deal with Sub Pop, home to Hot Hot Heat and formerly Nirvana. The Shins even managed to incur the wrath of indie-rock purists when "New Slang," a song from Oh, Inverted World, was used in a McDonald's commercial.

"At a Chicago ad agency, some kid working the music liked the Shins and thought we might want to make some money," says Mercer, 32, whose fledgling band wrestled with the idea, then decided to ask three times the offered price. "They came real close. So now we've got better equipment."

"I know a lot of people were pissed off about that," he says. "A lot of people have strong political beliefs that are anticorporate. You can't please everybody."

Musically though, the Shins seem to be pleasing most everyone who hears the band—at least people keen on cleverly literate art-pop with wistful turns and punky edges.

"I try and stay away from the more clichéd way to do a pop song," Mercer says. "It's so crucial to have a good musical foundation. I just concentrate on that, so it's strongly musical and melodic. It's more fun to work on that. The lyric stuff is more of a pain in the ass sometimes."

"I write about whatever I can, whatever's inspiring enough," he says of his slightly cynical lyrics, "like relationships I've had, or whatever I happen to be thinking about when I'm needing to write songs."

Mercer has sweeping experiences to draw from. His dad was in the Air Force, and Mercer himself was born in Hawaii and lived throughout Europe before moving to Albuquerque. His father also performed in clubs as a country-western singer.

"I was always around music, and my dad was famous for cranking the stereo at midnight," he says. "And living in England during high school, I fell in love with all those late new wave, neopsychedelic bands that were popular."

Mercer's early influences included British groups Echo and the Bunnymen, the Cure and XTC, and later encompassed American indie heroes like Pixies, Sonic Youth and Pavement. He even fronted a Dinosaur Jr. cover band in Albuquerque.

Of New Mexico, he says, "It's pretty, but not much of a supportive music scene for anything really. Not enough people. The sad thing is, when you're in a town of that size, when a good band does start up, they always move."

In turn, while the Shins were signed out of Albuquerque, Mercer and drummer Jesse Sandoval soon moved to Portland, Ore., and guitarist Dave Hernandez now lives in Seattle. Keyboardist-bassist Marty Crandall remained in New Mexico.

"There's a huge music scene in Portland. I don't know if it helps us, but it's a lot of fun to go to some great shows," says Mercer. Describing sessions with his bandmates in his Portland basement studio, he says, "They arrange their own stuff and they're fast, so it works out pretty well. It's not too much of a problem for us to live so far apart."

And if major labels come calling, would Mercer leave the indie world behind? If the situation made sense, he says. "I'm more of a pragmatist and think that indie rock exists for a lot of practical reasons, not just political ones," Mercer says. "If you're a band with a niche audience, you're not going to do well on a huge major label."

The Shins' audience, nonetheless, is growing. IB

Shooting Stars

Early portraits of musical icons show at the National Heritage Museum

Before Elvis Presley, Bob Dylan and the Beatles came along, blue suede shoes were a footwear faux pas, Highway 61 was a southern byway, and a yellow submarine was a deli sandwich with mustard. By the late 1950s and early 1960s, rock and roll had won over the nation's youth, but the music's stars had not yet achieved cultural prominence. The National Heritage Museum's new exhibition, Artist to Icon: Early Photographs of Elvis, Dylan and the Beatles, presents a unique look at the musicians who launched the era of guitar leads, heavy beats and protest ballads—captured on film before they were household names in America.

"The focus is on more intimate portraits in the period just before they jumped to superstardom," says Jim Fricke, curatorial manager at the Experience Music Project in Seattle, where the traveling exhibition was created. In 48 black-and-white photographs taken by five photographers—all of whom had close relationships with the musicians—Presley, Dylan and the Beatles are depicted before their worldwide fame: playing small venues around the world, recording songs that would become platinum hits, and waiting in lunch lines. "One of the things that's documented here is a kind of innocence about the music business that has passed for a lot of people," adds Fricke. "Nowadays you go from unknown to the cover of People magazine pretty quickly. All the artists here had the opportunity for an artistic adolescence."

A single rose representing them
Their commitment and never ending love
Their dreams and the promises made
And how their feelings will never fade
The way he knew right from the start
That she was the one who held the key to his heart
How he drops at nothing to get the extra smile
For one more chance to see her smile
They passed it's rose so it would reminisce time
Cause it reminded them of the greatest love there will ever miss

Dancing at Hurricane O'Reilly's

You were the handsome Asian male with a brown shirt that had glitter from a nearby bachelorette party. I was the strawberry blond with glasses in a jean skirt. We were both at the end of a pub crawl. While we each danced with others that night, we always came back to each other until it felt like it was just the two of us on the dance floor, then we danced with no one else. When we said our goodbyes with a sweet kiss at closing, you said you had your ways of finding me and you were sure we'd meet again. This is my way of finding you to ask, will you be my Valentine?

Travel Companion

Well, not exactly: On the Jan. 22 flight 194 from Atlanta to Boston, our eyes met and held as I was boarding the plane. You (blond, blue-eyed cutie) were already sitting in first class. I, (brown-eyed, petite brunette with the spunky orange coat) was headed back to coach. Unfortunately, our only other bit of contact occurred while waiting in baggage claim. Did I sense a connection as I managed a smile toward you? I'm kicking myself for not asking you to grab a coffee with me. Might you be a local or just a visitor in good ol' Beantown? If local, will you let me redeem myself and join me for that coffee? We can exchange travel stories.

Rude to a T

It's amazing that since the MBTA has increased the cost of their tokens from $1 to $1.25, many of the riders complain, harass and are downright rude to those who work at the MBTA. For example, the other night I was in line at the Arlington stop and a man was asking the token seller how long it would take to walk from Arlington to Park Street. The token seller stated that he had never walked it but it might take between 15 and 20 minutes. The man replied, "I guess I'll give you the quarter now!" Then he called the token seller an asshole and added what he could do with the quarter. The token seller replied, "Sir here's your token and have a good night." If that was me I would have been calling this arrogant guy every name in the book. I know the token sellers and train drivers do not make the decisions on fare increases, time schedules, etc. I also know that when I have a gripe, such as this latest fare increase, I contact the MBTA and speak to management. They are the ones who make the decisions and are responsible. For the small-minded guy (creep) who took it out on this innocent person, you should take a cab and pay more. For the rest of you, it's very rare I even hear a kind word out of your mouths while I'm on the train or in line waiting to buy a token. It's just plain rudeness most of the time.

Back Bay Station Orange Line

It was Jan. 6 at 8:45 am. You: tall, dark and handsome, with brown hair/blue eyes, pinstripe suit, charcoal gray overcoat, black wingtips and a black gym bag. You sat down just across from me on the train and our eyes kept meeting until I got off at State Street. You kept moving your leg (nervous twitch?) and wiggling your feet. I looked you over from head to toe to head to toe. I'd love to meet you for coffee and to talk some. Let me know.

Collisions/Rudds Show at T.T. the Bear's Jan. 2

You were an indie-looking boy, with light brown hair, wearing a trucker cap (what else?) and holding a black leather jacket. I think your shirt was maybe plaid-ish. You kept wandering around to different girls (and boys), but I didn't get the impression that you were with any of them. During the beginning of the Rudds' set you were standing to my left, and there was another blond girl in between us who you talked with briefly. We only made eye contact once from across the room and as I was leaving you were near the door putting on a black hoodie. But if you see this, whoever you are—you have a friendly face, and I'd love to talk to you.

The Second N Is Not Silent

Meghan, I had a great time with you on the New Year's Eve harbor cruise, even helping you clean up your spilled champagne. I had no idea the second N was not silent. I really hope I'll see you again. E-mail me.

Red Line Friday, Jan. 12

We were riding the Red Line that night toward Alewife. When I reached into my pockets for my gloves, my elbow hit you. I apologized, and you said that the close-together seats on the T were meant to get Bostonians to talk. I said it would be easier if we weren't so bundled up against the near-zero temperature. You said it makes people look like meatloafs. You were bundled up, but you have black hair, dark skin and a great smile. E-mail me.

You're So Vain

You probably think this ad is about you. You always wished for someone to write an IMPROPER ad about you, reading each issue with anticipation. Well, this time it is about you (and isn't it always all about you?), but I bet it's not quite what you expected. People warned me about you, and you are everything they warned me about: jealous, back-stabbing, selfish, calculating, self-righteous, vicious, crass, shallow, hypocritical, obsessive and anal-retentive. Talk about measuring your life in spoons. My dear Miss Prufrock, you will end up old and gray and lonely with only that book you keep of guys you have kissed/made out with/hooked up with to keep you company. Here is a to-do entry for your precious day planner: Get a life!

Lauren from Southie

Lauren from Southie (and Cheers). We shared an American flight from Boston to Orlando on Jan. 8. You mentioned the IMPROPER Impersonals, so here's one for you. We talked the entire flight, and the three hours went by way too quickly. I enjoyed your company and would love to do it again—if not in flight, how about lunch? I told you what I appreciate.

New Year's Eve Max

"Just Max" from Somerville: It was New Year's Eve at La Boom. I had no expectations for the night except to dance and break a bad luck curse that follows me every New Year's Eve. Then I met you, a young handsome Portuguese man with longish light brown hair and a goatee and wearing a white shirt and a nice smile. We danced for hours magically and passionately throughout the night. At the end of the night, you asked how you would find me, and then your brother handed me his cell phone. I put my number in the phone in haste and left you too fast. I found out when I got home that I put my number in incorrectly. I wish I could go back to those moments and say goodbye differently. Even if we were not to meet again I wish I had kissed you goodbye and thanked you for making my night so special. I am now the one asking the question: How do I find you?

rockie horoscope

FEBRUARY 4 – 17, 2004

AQUARIUS JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

In your own idiosyncratic way, you're the person with the power to inspire and transform, to be the muse and the magician. But if you don't want to accept the responsibility, if your ambitions don't reach those heights, feel free to take refuge in "what might have been." Just make sure that you aren't oblivious to the opportunities that come to light during the Leo full moon period. Besides opening your heart to a lovable partner, you're also ripe for a thrilling adventure.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

The wily Fish will elude a manipulative parent or employer who tries to direct your next move by playing on his or her sympathies. The innovative Fish will spot a financial opportunity, preferably one based on pleasurable pastimes, such as gardening, before the week is out. The artistic Fish will incorporate the life-giving power of the sun as it melds with Pisces' imaginative Neptune ruler to create works that colleagues will admire. But none will be happier than the Fish whose abiding faith in their team won the Super Bowl.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

A hazy impression of how the future will unfold becomes clearer the further into February you get. The illusions that sustained you, the romantic notions you entertained last week, fade in the light of the rational Aquarius sun. And as your energetic Mars ruler approaches the line between self-reliant Aries and sensitive, sensible Taurus, you may realize that you can't run the entire show by yourself. But will you turn to colleagues, clients or members of the circle you travel in for support? If you want to taste success you will.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Feeling slightly schizoid? How can the Bull act with such generosity of spirit one day and behave like a green-eyed monster the next? Simple, because your Venus ruler opens your heart chakra when it faces expansive Jupiter, but while the love planet is challenged by manipulative Pluto, you become jealous and vindictive. Other slash-and-burn reactions may follow once assertive Mars moves into your sign. Call the shots, get into shape, even schedule surgery, but do it before spring arrives and Mars leaves.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

This is a good time to work on a problem/project that's been lingering far too long. Try to think outside the box and seek advice from unfamiliar, uninvolved faces, not the same bunch of sympathetic listeners. While benevolent Jupiter rewards your Mercury ruler, it is OK to capitalize on the advantages accorded you, and pretty dumb not to. You'll probably be offered another favorable opportunity in May, after Mercury's next retrograde period, but you won't have as much financial support then as you can amass now.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

You're moving on. New concerns and other interests appear after irritable, impatient Mars in your career midheaven stops applying pressure. For the next seven weeks, "pleased and pleasurable" will better describe the atmosphere at work. But you won't get bored; Mars in Taurus is quite productive, artistic and aware of the bottom line. Can more money be far behind? Not if you spend time focusing on financial growth while your moon ruler is full in your Leo money house. Opportunities like this are few and far between.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

An artistic breakthrough for musicians, a religious experience for the faithful and, for inventive minds, a "eureka" moment awaits. While your sun ruler merges with inspirational Neptune in Aquarius, the limitations imposed by significant others could disappear in a flash. The Leo full moon can also offer an opportunity to pierce the veil of illusion. And while a potential partner might be fudging the facts, it's probably because he or she is in hot pursuit of a fantasy that includes you. Hoopla and glamour shots follow.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Someone in the family could be jealous of the attention you're enjoying or the lucky breaks you're getting. If that person wasn't so mean or manipulative, you might consider sharing the good fortune that prosperous, protective Jupiter promises. If your turn at bat hasn't come up yet, be patient—it will. Until then, you may also benefit from an infusion of courageous Martian energy, especially if it is directed to joint money matters. Here's an entrepreneurial opportunity that's about to catch fire.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Enough of the family, bring on the friends and lovers. Like your Aries counterpart, the further you immerse yourself in the innovative Aquarius energy field, the less pressure you'll be under, the more liberated you'll feel. Some snarling and snapping from your mate or an ex could linger on, but it won't have the impact it did, and you won't get as angry. You should be able to move out of martyr mode as soon as your Venus ruler leaves pity-me Pisces for hot and horny Aries on the 8th. Get ready for a real adventure.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

What a good time to upgrade your equipment, launch a Web site and break out the bubbly! This week, the inventive Aquarius sun and imaginative Neptune conspire to make one of your dreams come true. Still, you'll have to expend some effort; nothing comes easily to the Scorpio strategist. Although even the eagle-eyed among you might not grasp the implications right away, scattered here and there are astrological indications that something very sexy and ultimately very expensive is about to capture your fancy.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Reminding an optimistic Centaur to be careful about a money matter is often futile. But since the humanitarian Aquarius sun and idealistic, illusionary Neptune are meeting in your house of assets and acquisitions this week, before you write the check, stop and question the validity of the cause you're about to support and the credentials of the solicitor. A scam could be brewing closer than you think. The heartfelt Leo full moon provides a reason to treat yourself and a loved one. Don't wait for Valentine's Day.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

If you were born in December, you should take the Sagittarius warning to heart. If you are a January Goat, consider promoting a fantasy of your own. A lot of personal charisma and a radiant aura will help push your agenda forward fast. And since assertive Mars should mellow you out while it transits earthy Taurus, you probably won't rub people, especially family members, the wrong way much longer. The full moon period can be especially warm, while, come Valentine's Day, Venus won't be sweet to your Saturn ruler.

LEAVING THE HEADLIGHTS ON...

It was like a quick trip to Mexico, minus the gastrointestinal distress, when the Institute of Contemporary Art hosted an invitation-only preview of its newest exhibition, Made in Mexico.

Despite the brass-monkey weather outside, guests got into a south-of-the-border vibe as they perused the three floors of galleries while sipping wine and nibbling delicious Mexican-inspired nibbles.

Among the attendees: interim Mexican consul to Boston Rodrigo Marquez; ICA director Jill Medvedow; Ars Libra operator Gabriele Ouellette; the madcap Tanya Contos (who looks like a prettier version of Frida Kahlo); biotech mogul Sam Bogash; real estate cutie Jay Leo; hair deity Gary Croteau; Nashville-bred socialite Trevania Henderson and artist Gay Gillies (who left their husbands at home to look after the kids); Back Bay fabulons Lois and Steve Kunian; art dealer Abi Ross Goodman and her affable other half, Mark; nightlife czarina Mindy D'Arbeloff; attorney-at-large Matthew Kozol; and so on and so forth down the list of the usual suspects.

"I didn't know you were made in Mexico," joked one guest, greeting a friend.

"Sure I was. And more than once, I might add," was his saucy reply.

However, the raciest remark came from the fur-and-cashmere-clad woman who said, "Thank God I'm wearing a padded bra. Otherwise, you'd clearly see how cold it is outside."

THE SQUARE ROOT OF THE AREA TIMES PI, OR SOMETHING...

Remember in 10th-grade geometry class, when you wondered, "When the hell will I ever need to know this stuff?" Well, you were right, which was proven once again by the way-swanky Fifth Anniversary Party at Radius.

Even if you vaguely recalled that the restaurant's name means a straight line extending from the center of a circle to any point on its circumference, it would have been utterly useless, since it was impossible to walk in a straight line anywhere, so packed was the party with assorted celebrities and VIPs, and so potent and potable were the pomegranate martinis.

Present and accounted for in a throng that rivaled Milan for stylishness, L.A. for looks and Rio for balls-to-the-wall party-heartiness: former GE chief Jack Welch and his paramour, Suzie Wetlaufer; Red Sox CEO Larry Lucchino and the magnificent Stacey; WBZ anchor-babe Lisa Hughes; rock jock Greg Hill of WAAF; hockey legend Cam Neely with the gorgeous Paulina; former J. Geils frontman Peter Wolf and celebrity chef Ming Tsai (both sporting dark glasses); nightlife kingpin Manos Linoxilakis and his incomparable other half, Cynthia; music mogul Richie Balsbaugh; Brazilian supermodel Fabiana; Martha's Vineyard madman Michael Stutz; real estate visionary Jonathan Kaye; Tudor Investments honcho Jim Pallotta and his lovely wife, Kim; tall, blond stunner Hollis Colby and Republican publican Tom Kershaw of Cheers; the absurdly sexy Susan Callendar; ridiculously photogenic pair Jeff and Nicole Bellows; attorney-about-town Evan Kushner; tag-teaming babe-a-licious blond sisters Karen Keaney and Heidi Barclay; Gallic funboy Christophe Mueller; TV reporter and hot patootie Peg Rusconi; and enough eye candy to cause some serious whiplash.

Although the festivities were scheduled to end by 10, no one seemed even remotely inclined to leave, and, in fact, at 11, guests were still arriving. But that's only one of the ways in which the hosts turned out to be dead wrong. The invitation promised, "a party to remember," and I'm still trying to recall exactly what happened. IB

SPRING LOOKS

The IMPROPER's fashion and beauty editor, Samantha House, began work on our Spring Fashion Preview issue back in September. Yup, while you and I were reluctantly stowing our sandals and surveying our sweaters, designers were flocking to New York's Fashion Week to show their spring '04 collections. In this issue, House shows us the trends she saw on the runways and what we can expect to see in Boston stores.

For a cheat sheet on what to buy to be en vogue, turn to page 17, where House previews spring's hottest looks. Soft cardigans, cropped jackets and metallics are among the must-haves for women. Four fashion features highlight those trends and others—all in bright hues that give you even more reason to long for the thaw. And our beauty feature shows you the lip and eye colors that complete the look. (Men, check out page 23 for fashionable clothes that won't hurt your wallet.)

Even as we were finishing up this issue, House headed off to New York for fall '04 Fashion Week, previewing the stuff we'll all be seeing six months from now. (The early word is '40s-style skirts, sleek floor-length gowns, fur shrugs and stoles, the rebirth of gold lamé and a farewell to super-low-rise pants.)

If all this fashion talk doesn't do it for you, maybe cupcakes do. Writer and foodie Ruth Tobias rounds out this issue with a look at some of Boston's most winter-blues-busting desserts and a suggestion: If you're going for carbs, go for broke.

BEYOND BACHELORS AND BACHELORETTES

There are a lot of couples living in Boston that have moved past the singles scene (as covered in your Jan. 21 Bachelor and Bachelorettes issue), have planned and executed their weddings (as covered in your Feb. 4 Bridal issue) and are now raising families (as covered in your...wait, you don't have an issue for that). We're young, we read your magazine, but we have kids. What do young families do in Boston? Perhaps you can provide a guide, because having kids doesn't render one suddenly uninterested in having a life. Boston is an exceptional place to raise a family. Many young couples are choosing to stay where the action is, where services are convenient and where entertainment is always available. However, the activities available for young married couples in Boston are not always obvious. Please consider an issue dedicated to young families, which includes activities not only for stay-at-home moms, but also for working parents.

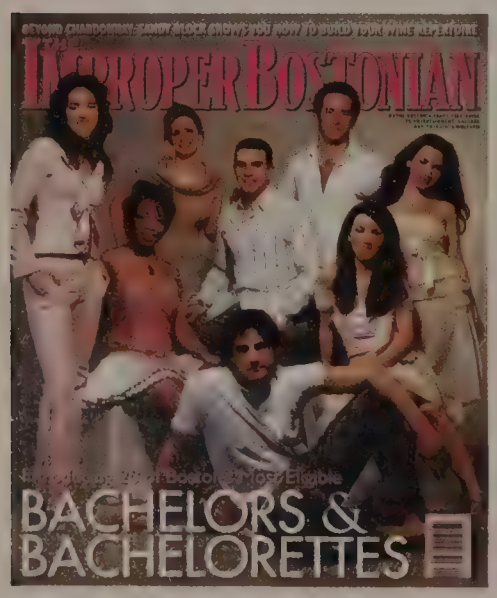
AVOID THE 'ROIDS



I've never written to a magazine before but I had to let you know that Ezra's last column ("State of My Union," Feb. 4) about exorbitant parking rates, borderline-psychotic Bostonians, etc., was truly hilarious. I laughed out loud while reading it alone in my kitchen, nearly choking on a mouthful of cereal. I'm also now inspired to pick up the Harry Potter series that's been sitting in my apartment for ages. (Riding at the tail end of my schooling, I have time to do things like chew my food and read for pleasure.)

Oh, and one more thing: The testicular shrinkage benefits of steroids (makes you a faster runner, right?) are offset by the simultaneous increase in breast tissue one experiences as well. Just a little heads-up. I look forward to the next issue—thanks for adding to the levity in my life!

—SARAH KIM

CORRECTION

The Proper Bostonians byline in the Feb 18 issue's online table of contents should have read Kerry Brett Hurley.

WHAT DO YOUNG FAMILIES DO IN BOSTON? PERHAPS YOU CAN PROVIDE A GUIDE, BECAUSE HAVING KIDS DOESN'T RENDER ONE UNINTERESTED IN HAVING A LIFE.

SLEEK HAVEN

Sanctuary, a sleek, modern addition to Faneuil Hall, opened on New Year's Eve, and business hasn't slowed for a minute. A departure from the owners' other bars, Aqua and the Black Rhino, Sanctuary is more elegant and chichi (think Saint meets Teatro). And it's a far cry from the typical tourist traps that populate Quincy Market (as evidenced by the strict dress code: no sneakers, jeans are discouraged).

The inside is striking; the top two floors have incredibly high curved ceilings, half-moon banquettes and long, glowing blue bars. The lower level, which is open only on weekends, is a funky, red-hued space with exposed granite walls and a plenty of room for mingling. On recent weekends, there's been a line down the block to get in.

Late-night diners scarf up tapas (sweet potato dumplings; chorizo y garbanzos; lobster tamales; enchiladas de pollo, all under $10) and drink white sangria by the pitcherful. Other dining options include sandwiches (like El Cubano for $8); salads (Tokyo tuna for $8); soups (Cuban black bean for $4); and larger plates like the Big Kahuna Polynesian pupu platter ($18); Jamaican Me Crazy chicken ($15); and the Yucatan Beach Shack mahi mahi taco platter ($17). *189 State St., Boston (617-573-9333). TEN REASONS...

...to be optimistic about the 2004 Red Sox as spring training gets under way Feb. 20.

1. Curt Schilling. Enough said.
2. The Yankees. The Evil Empire became the first team in 100 years to lose three 15-game winners (Andy Pettitte, David Wells and Roger Clemens) in one offseason.
3. Terry Francona. Did Grady Little ever take the stage at the Paradise and lead the crowd in a rousing "Yankees Suck" chant? Also, see No. 1, who likely wouldn't be here if the Sox hadn't brought Francona aboard.
4. Last year's team. They came within five outs of the World Series, and for the most part they're back.
5. Manny and Nomar. We were excited about the A-Rod deal, but you can't complain when you're left with two of the best hitters in the game.
6. The front office. Theo Epstein and company have proven that they'll consider any move to make the team better.
7. The Patriots. If they can win two Super Bowls in three years...
8. Blasts from the past. Besides Schilling, former Sox Ellis Burks and Brian Daubach are back. Let's hope Daubach regrows his lucky beard.
9. The National League. Face it: they all stink.
10. Keith Foulke. Let us all observe a moment of silence for the closer-by-committee idea. All hail the closer! —Ezra Dyer

OSCAR BUZZ KILL

Golden Globes...Grammys...Screen Actors Guild Awards...'Tis the season of celebrity worship. Though we've stroked countless Hollywood egos and logged far too many hours of Joan and Melissa, the biggest spectacle's still to come: Oscar makes his yearly appearance Feb. 29. Here, three local personalities—executive director of the Coolidge Corner Theatre Joe Zina, comedian Kelly MacFarland and pop culture columnist for the Boston Globe Renee Graham—chat about their Academy Awards wish list.

IB: What are your choices for best actor, actress and film (even if they're not nominated)?

JZ: Bill Murray [Lost in Translation], for his sophistication, wit and charm. Sean Penn [Mystic River], though he was better in 21 Grams; Mystic River wasn't his best performance. Charlize Theron [Monster] gives me hope that I can return to my original beauty after killing a few people.

KM: Diane Keaton in Something's Gotta Give. She gave that part her all. She was hysterical!

RG: For best actor, Chiwetel Ejiofor in Dirty Pretty Things. A criminally overlooked performance in a criminally overlooked film. For best actress, Condoleezza Rice as national security advisor on ABC's Nightline for claiming the Bush administration never implied Saddam Hussein was linked to the Sept. 11 attacks. She could easily devour Hannibal Lecter with some fava beans and a nice Chianti. American Splendor for best picture. Save for a single nomination for Best Adapted Screenplay, the Academy really blew it with this one. It was sweet without being sappy, cynical without being bitter. Every performance—especially Paul Giamatti and Hope Davis—was pitch perfect.

IB: If there were such a category, who would take home the Oscar for worst performance or film?

JZ: George Clooney in Intolerable Cruelty.

KM: That fish, Nemo. I didn't buy it that he was really lost, and I think they could've tried harder to find him.

RG: Halle Berry in Gothika. Yes, there are far worse things than looking at Halle Berry for two hours. If this is any indication of her post-Oscar career, she may soon find herself starring in a sequel to B.A.P.S.

IB: If you could ban one person from the red carpet for life, who would it be?

JZ: Joan Rivers. If her skin gets any tighter, she'll be in competition with Gollum on the carpet for attention.

KM: Courtney Love. The only carpet she should be walking on is the one lining the halls of Betty Ford. "Have some coffee Courtney...and put your dress down. We can see your panties."

RG: Anyone with the name "Rivers." (Except Rivers Cuomo of Weezer.)

IB: What topic will we be sick of hearing about by the end of the end of the night?

JZ: How many women's breasts will fall out of their...gowns.

KM: Those Hobbits. They're so creepy.

RG: The proposed time warp/delay to save the world from naughty celebrity behavior.

IB: If you could plan something to one-up Janet Jackson and Justin Timberlake's Super Bowl stunt, what would it be?

JZ: To have Jack Nicholson pull out his johnson.

KM: I would show both of my breasts...and the nipple decorations would be even more disgusting!

RG: Somewhere out there, there's a hideously well-paid publicist already conjuring up new stupid celebrity tricks to lower the bar and garner our attention. So I'll leave that to the experts.

IB: Who are you most looking forward to seeing on the red carpet?

JZ: The Fab Five from Queer Eye.

KM: Ashton Kutcher. He's so delicious.

RG: Absolutely nobody. I find all the pregame nonsense tiresome, whether it's the Super Bowl or the Academy Awards. If I never again hear someone say, "Who are you wearing?" it'll be too soon.

EASY AS PIE

Pie, Oh My... Apple is only the beginning of the sweet and savory varieties at Somerville's Petsi Pies. Inspired after baking up a storm for a friend's wedding, Renee McLeod opened Petsi (pronounced Pete-see, it's McLeod's childhood nickname) just before Thanksgiving. "I realized I was having such a blast, why not open that pie shop I've been talking about?" says the former graphic designer. Pecan, blueberry and chai-spiced apple pies are also on the menu, along with spinach and zucchini–and–curry custard tarts. So what's the pie lady's favorite? "It would have to be sweet potato," she says. 285 Beacon St., Somerville (617-661-7437).

That's a Lot of Cake... How many pastry chefs does it take to make a wedding cake? It took 57 to bake the latest Guinness Book of World Records contender for largest wedding cake—all 17 feet, seven tiers and 15,032 pounds of it. After seven days of mixing and baking, the behemoth confection stood tall at Mohegan's Sun's New England Bridal Showcase. Mohegan's executive pastry chef, Lynn Mansel, headed the project, which called for 10,000 pounds of pound cake batter and 4,810 pounds of vanilla and almond frosting. The current title-holder, made for Disney's Shrek and Fiona wedding celebration, weighed in at 5,334 lbs. Guinness' jury is still out on Mohegan's play for the record, but in this case, we think they can probably have their cake and eat it too.

The world's biggest wedding cake?

Pizza Anytime... Staking out a niche among the dozens of pizza parlors in town is quite a challenge. For the pie-masters at Pizza Oggi (oggi means "today" in Italian), the recipe for success is all in the crust. Catering veterans Steve Welch and Laura Edelstein of Prince Street Caterers opened Oggi in Jamaica Plain several months ago, and their herbed oil–brushed crust with black and white sesame seeds is a carbohydrate binge. The take-out-only joint also features gourmet pies, sandwiches and vegetarian specials like ginger-coated broccoli and carrot pizza with garlic and herbs. 8 Perkins St., Jamaica Plain (617-971-9797).

I Scream, You Scream..."Is this the best ice cream you've ever had?" asked the owner of the newly opened Cold Stone Creamery as he treated the IMPROPER office to a taste-test last week. After a lick or two...or 25...we decided it was definitely a contender. The Arizona-based chain opened in Charlestown's City Square in early February and has plans to open another shop in the Theater District soon. Its shtick is super-premium ice cream (read 14 percent butterfat) rolled onto a frozen granite stone and mixed with a choice of 40 mix-ins. Flavors range from French vanilla to eggnog to banana, but our consensus fave was the sweet cream. With creations like mint ice cream with chocolate chips, brownie and fudge, we were compelled to lick our bowls clean. 100 City Square, Charlestown (617-242-0100). —E.H, J.I. and J.S.

LITTLE SHOP OF FLOWERS

Don't let appearances fool you. Ilex, the South End's newest retailer (opened Feb. 14), is much more than a florist. Sure, you can walk in and pick out your own fresh-cut flowers, but I recommend taking advantage of the store's full range of styling services. They can handle anything from coordinating the look and feel of a party to everyday decorating. My favorite is the bridal styling service. Instead of spending a fortune on a wedding planner to pick every detail of your big day, you can tell Ilex owner/designer Andrew Anderson what you have in mind, and he'll turn your wedding into a one-of-a-kind masterpiece—coordinating everything from the color of the bridesmaids' gowns to the linens, lighting, flatware and, of course, flowers. Whether it's creating a simple flower arrangement or throwing a huge bash, the experts at Ilex understand that achieving subtle elegance is all in the details. 73 Berkeley St., Boston (617-422-0300). —Samantha House

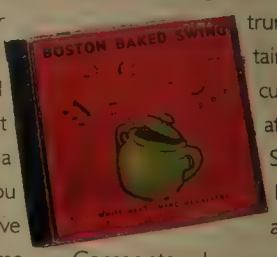
That's a Trip... The Briar Group's six pubs (the Green Briar, the Kinvara, the Harp, Ned Devine's, M.J. O'Connor's and Sólás) are giving away six round-trip tickets to Shannon, Ireland. The drawing is held on March 12th at M.J. O'Connor's, which ought to give the winners enough time to find the proper Celtics jersey to wear on St. Patty's Day in Ireland. (We're imagining it looks just like the scene in the "Jump Around" video.)



Italian Ice... Since the demise of Bertucci's in Davis Square in 2002, Greater Boston has been sorely lacking a facility in which to play some indoor boccie. Well, the good news is that the recently refurbished Steriti Memorial Rink in the North End has added not just one, but two boccie ball lanes, and refurbished its skating rink! After $5.3 million in much-needed renovations, the city unveiled the new rink and lanes in October. Rink manager Jim Tobin reports that, surprise, surprise, the lanes are a hit with the North End old-timers. "Everyone's welcome, and if you don't know how to play, it's a slow deal. You could pick it up after watching a game." 583 Commercial St., Boston (617-523-9327).

Freaky Friday... Ladies, shine up your nose rings, strap on your latex, and touch up the Manic Panic in your mane. The Miss Gothic Massachusetts Pageant is seeking women, 18 and up, who are "devilish, dark and doomed" to participate in the 2004 competition March 5 at ManRay. The reigning queen, Tatiana de Profundis, will pass her title on to the lucky lady who proves most morose. We're not exactly sure what the prizes (lifetime wardrobe from Hot Topic?) or duties (blogging on gothornot.com?) include, but the Web site warns: As always, the living need not apply. www.missgothicmass.com.

Making the Video... Watertown's Deluxe Town Diner went Hollywood for a day when Picture Park Productions teamed up with Blue Man Group to shoot the music video for "I Feel Love" from the troupe's CD The Complex. Director Harry McCoy says Blue Man chose Deluxe for its classic diner charm and proximity to Boston. Deluxe owner Don Levy says the 14-hour shoot went smoothly, and the men in blue remained true to form by turning frappes into an artistic medium. Look for the video on cable TV later this month.

Designer Consignor... If you're going the profitable, as opposed to charitable, route when purging your closet of old designer duds, check out Cuff & Tweed. The Marlborough-based consignment service, launched in 2003, auctions designer wardrobe castoffs on eBay and gives you 70 percent of the cut. Founder and sole employee Elizabeth Zalman says it takes roughly two weeks to complete a cycle—meaning from the moment you make your appointment until you receive your check. Zalman comes to your home, picks what she wants, snaps some digital shots, lists the goods on eBay and runs a seven-day auction. There's only one rule: clothes must be designer label. (617-686-5407). www.cuffandtweed.com.

Tootsie Tappers... Unless you remember the 69 Boyz' 1994 club hit "Tootsie Roll" ("to the left, to the left"), the all-American chocolate candy doesn't normally call music to mind. However, Brookline native (and CEO of Tootsie Roll Industries for 40-plus years) Mel Gordon composes big-band swing music on the side. The trumpet-playing captain of industry, who cut his business teeth at Harvard Business School and honed his musical talents at New England Conservatory, has penned 66 swing tunes since 1942, and Craig Ball and the White Heat Swing Orchestra have recorded 17 of them for the CD Boston Baked Swing. Keep an ear out for these Tootsie tunes on New England big-band radio stations.

BOWLED OVER

After the Super Bowl, hooligans took over the city. Most of them started at my apartment.

Saddam's Spider Hole" would be a great name for a gay bar in Baghdad. That million-dinar idea occurred to me while trying to think of a way to describe my apartment after my Super Bowl party, because even a week after the fact, there are some startling similarities between my place and Saddam's hidey-hovel: both are underground, both are filled with dirty dishes and both smell like raunchy unwashed dictator armpit. But there's one major difference: Saddam didn't throw the most kick-ass Super Bowl party ever, and I did.

The planning and preparation that went into my Super Bowl party might have been rivaled only by the actual Super Bowl. I had to get a keg and a bunch of 30-packs, plus fixins for bloody Marys; go grocery shopping for snacks, grilling items and ingredients for my famously delicious chili; drive to my parents' house to get an extra TV to accommodate overspill out of the main living room area; borrow extra chairs and stools from various friends around the city; and write an e-mail rallying the faithful. Some other ideas for enhancing the party were also given a shot, such as creating Green Monster–like stadium seating by moving the couch forward and placing a row of stools behind it. Other schemes—like my plan to take the tailgate off my father's truck and somehow affix it to a wall so that we could tailgate in my apartment—remain unfulfilled, damn great ideas.

The e-mail apparently worked, because at one point I counted 30 people in my crib, including one girl dressed in full Mardi Gras regalia with a towering feather headdress, fishnet stockings and a bustier. I still have no idea who she was, but you know what they say: A party ain't a party till a Mardi Gras dancer girl shows up and eats chili. Perhaps she was an apparition conjured by seven-layer dip and too many cups of Bud Light.

By halftime, someone who was really drunk got the idea to order the Lingerie Bowl on pay-per-view (his name rhymes with "Pez"), but that notion was abandoned because the Lingerie Bowl is sophomoric, objectifies women and promotes eating disorders and the pursuit of unrealistic body images. Also I couldn't figure out how to order it. So we watched the Super Bowl halftime show, which, as everyone on the planet now knows, had a major surprise in store: P. Diddy! I couldn't believe it when he rose up out of the stage and sang "Mo' money, mo' problems." After that I went to the bathroom.

During the second half the tension mounted. Touchdowns flew back and forth as I struggled to pay attention to the game and not fall off my stool. By the fourth quarter, my friend Andy looked like a man experiencing a ball-removal operation without anesthesia. He just sat there on the floor, hugging a 30-pack, grimacing and pulling his hair. But when the winning field goal split the uprights, Andy joined the rest of the room in doing what happy Patriots fans do best: breaking stuff. People sprayed each other with beer. The coffee table got knocked over, propelling the aforementioned tasty seven-layer dip onto the rug (people reading this who happen to be my building manager should know that it cleaned up easily and didn't leave a spot). Somehow my floor lamp got broken in such a way that the wiring leads are exposed (yes, I need to throw it away before I become tempted to piece it back together with duct tape and eventually electrocute myself).

BY HALFTIME, SOMEONE WHO WAS REALLY DRUNK GOT THE IDEA TO ORDER THE LINGERIE BOWL ON PAY-PER-VIEW (HIS NAME RHYMES WITH "PEZ").

But it was worth it. After all the energy I've invested in this team this season (and, for that matter, over the course of my life), they rewarded me with another championship. Sure, Roommate Scott and I spent about $500 on supplies, my apartment was destroyed and I had the regular misery of Monday morning compounded by a hangover that hung over until about Wednesday. And instead of being merely insanely jealous of Tom Brady, I'm now Mike Tyson–level insanely jealous of Tom Brady. Would Blue Cross/Blue Shield cover a chin dimple implant? Sure, two Super Bowl MVP trophies and having every woman under the age of 90 want to bone you might be priceless, but maybe my MasterCard can buy me a cute chimple. That's something to think about while I look for a good spot to mount that tailgate for next year. IB

LYNN HOFFMAN

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Lynn Hoffman is a New York–based radio personality and an on-air host for VH1 Classic. Born in Boston, she was raised in Newton and graduated from Newton South before earning a bachelor's degree in communications from the Art Institute of Boston in 1992. Having recorded a radio ad for her father's office furniture business at the age of 19, she landed her first professional broadcasting job as a traffic and news reporter for Metro Networks. Two weeks after starting, she moved into the prime-time morning drive slot. In 1996, she was hired as John Lander's co-host on the morning show on WBMX Mix 98.5. Her five-year run won consistently high ratings and made her a household name in Boston. She moved to New York in February 2002 and three months later landed the job at VH1 Classic, the fledgling MTV Networks channel that focuses on the music of the '60s, '70s and '80s. The channel has steadily gained viewership, and in her position as host, Hoffman has worked with such legendary artists as David Crosby, Donna Summer, Hall & Oates, Pat Benatar and Suzanne Vega. In addition to her TV work, she was recently tapped as morning drive-time DJ for WNEW Mix 102.7, in New York, pairing up with her former Boston colleague, Gregg Daniels, and she does extensive voice-over work for radio stations throughout the country. She lives in Manhattan with her boyfriend.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, so you're reunited with Gregg Daniels. Does it feel like old times?

Lynn Hoffman: I feel like a kid back in college again, living in the dorms, because not only do we work together, but he lives right upstairs from me, too.

JS: So your life is sort of like a sitcom.

LH: More like my own little reality show.

JS: I understand that you bet against the Patriots in the Super Bowl?

LH: I didn't want to. I did it kicking and screaming. I lost a coin toss, and it was the hardest Super Bowl I ever had to watch. It was one of those good old-fashioned radio stunts: The bet was that whoever had the losing team would have to do an entire broadcast from a public location in their bathing suit. I can tell you, during the last quarter, I was doing sit-ups and push-ups.

JS: So where will you have to do your show?

LH: Right now, they're considering Grand Central Station and the Port Authority.

JS: So do people recognize you on the street now?

LH: Well, the great thing is that VH1 Classic is now in 36 million homes. We started in only 12 million. We're also on a couple of airlines, which is fantastic. So the word is spreading, and I think 2005 is when it's really going to kick into high gear, as in full-on, 24-hour programming, advertising, etc.

JS: So you're bracing yourself for major stardom.

JS: Like?

LH: Well, let's just say that you're probably gonna get sick of seeing me on television in the next three years. I just finished shooting a Time-Life commercial with Roger Daltrey from the Who. It was the funnest day of my life.

JS: In Boston, you were a big fish in a small pond. Do you feel like a small fish in a big pond in New York?

LH: Well, I don't feel like I'm a big fish, by any means. You know, when you're not here, New York might seem overwhelming—like the biggest celebrity of all celebrities, impossible to connect with it. But when you're here, it's totally approachable and something you can get your arms around. New York puts its pants on one leg at a time, just like everywhere else.

JS: You're in a business that's completely geared toward youth. How do you stay young?

LH: It's called moisturizer!

JS: Seriously, you're in your 30s…

LH: Early 30s.

JS: Whatever. How do you relate to the Britney and Justin teenybopper crowd?

LH: Well, the greatest thing is that VH1 Classic is totally not geared toward kids, so I'm covered there, and the radio station is geared toward adults, so I don't really have to deal with that.

JS: So screw the kids!

LH: I gotta tell you, if I never see Britney again, I won't be upset.

JS: Ever go to work looking like hell just because you can?

LH: That's the beauty of radio. The only thing that makes up for waking up at 4 am is that nobody but the people you work with gets to look at you.

JS: So who convinces all those small-business owners with really thick accents that it's a good idea for them to do their own radio spots?

LH: [Laughs.] I love that question! There are so many of those, and they're awful, but that's all about the advertiser. When they're going to buy an ad, they have a decision. They can either have it voiced by a professional, or they can have the DJ they like do it for them, or they can voice it themselves. They're usually told by the salespeople that it's a good idea to have a professional do it, because it will make their product stand out and sound better, but sometimes they're cheap, and since it's their money, they call the shots.

JS: Has radio become completely corporate and generic?

LH: From where I sit? No. If you're creative and you have a boss who doesn't micromanage you and lets you do your thing, you couldn't ask for anything more, and that's what I have.

JS: Is satellite radio the future?

LH: I would have to say yeah. I love it. I think with over a thousand cable channels on TV, why wouldn't radio be next?

JS: Do musicians hit on you?

LH: A lot of them are just charming and flirtatious.

JS: C'mon! You're a good-looking woman. For a rock star, hitting on good-looking women is part of the job.

LH: OK. I can think of one who did a full lip-lock while I was trying to get him to do something on tape. Anyway, it's happened a couple of times, and it's not OK. I don't care if you are a rock star. I don't know where your mouth has been. You could be the Pope, and I still wouldn't want to kiss you.

JS: Worst part of your job?

LH: Having to get up at 4 am.

JS: Best perk?

LH: Well, for TV, it's wardrobe, hair and makeup, which is every girl's dream. And the fact that I have to get a manicure and a facial. It's part of the job. The best perk of radio is getting to work with my best friend, and the creativity.

JS: When was the last time you paid for a CD?

LH: Last week, actually. I bought the new Seal CD. I believe in supporting the music business, because it supports me.

JS: Ever find yourself using your radio/TV announcer persona at home?

LH: Only in bed. [Laughs.] I try not to talk about work at home, because my boyfriend is in the business as well, so it would just be a complete turn-off.

JS: Last question: Fill in the blank: Lynn Hoffman would like you to know that…

LH: Well, the thing I always hear from Boston is that no one knows what became of me. So I guess Lynn Hoffman would like you to know that she's alive and well and living in New York… But she's still a Red Sox and Patriots and Celtics and Bruins fan. IB spring fashion 2004

It may seem hard to believe as the cold continues to rage in Boston, but spring will eventually arrive, and the designers are ready with a shot of color and optimism that will lift your spirits and add kick to your wardrobe. The ladylike look has been slowly making its way back for the last few seasons, and this spring's fashions inject even more of that femininity into our dressing. So, what should you keep around and what should you toss? Here's a list of the things you won't be able to live without this year.

Color, color, color. Even if you never thought you'd dare to wear bright yellow, you'll be surprised how much you'll have to have it. From pastels to fluorescents, color is the new black, and it's already staring to pop up everywhere in the form of accessories. Further into spring, it will show itself in skirts, shirts and dresses as well.

A cardigan that goes with everything you own is a must this spring. Look for 50s-inspired styles made from cashmere, with opalescent buttons. Pair with a camisole and jeans, or wear over a slip dress for an ultrafeminine look.

A trench coat (think Audrey Hepburn) will keep you dry and warm, and stylish as well. Opt for either the full-length traditional type in tan, or try a half-length in a more modern, patterned style like plaid or a floral print.

One structured bag for day to night is all you need for toting your necessities. Get rid of last year's oversized slouchy bag and replace it with a square, plum, crocodile print bag instead.

A cropped jacket pairs nicely with dark denim for the workplace or dinner, as well as with a satin skirt for a first date. Think bolero or flare at the bottom to add a fresh touch to pieces you already own.

Flowing fabrics like chiffon are always in style for spring, but the newest designs add layers upon layers. Pieces with tiered layers or dresses with handkerchief hems update your look.

Metallics like gold and bronze are the perfect complement to any of the current trends. Mix a silvery satin top with a bright skirt for day or evening wear.

Knee-length skirts. Pack up those tight little skirts and trade them in for A-line or pencil-straight skirts with hemlines that hit around the knee. The new style is about sophistication, not baring maximum skin. iB

SPRING

FIVE FROCKS FOR DAY OR NIGHT

Whether you're headed out to brunch or off for a weekend on the Cape, spring dresses are the simplest way to pull off feminine chic. Easy to throw on, they give the wearer a put-together look with little or no effort. This year, when the warmer season finally arrives, look for dresses in prints, florals and vibrant colors. Hemlines this spring are to the knee, and both A-line and straight skirts are popular. Keep a soft cardigan on hand for those cool nights, and you'll retain the ladylike allure that's bound to be so popular this spring.

It's been a long, cold winter, and you need some relief. May we suggest the little bakery on the corner?

the sweetest Cure

Walking around Boston in the thick of winter is like touring a horror-movie set at the end of a long day of filming: everywhere shuffling zombies, wraiths huddled vampire-style beneath great cloaks, Frankensteins stiff-jointed and moaning about the cold. We are one wretched lot, practically begging for the stake to put us out of our misery.

Better make that a fork to put a spring in our step and warmth in our hearts. A dessert fork, that is.

Atkins mania notwithstanding, we all know from sugar highs, and we love the way carbs calm us like a lullaby. Some of us can even cite scientific studies on the levels of mood-boosting serotonin in chocolate. In other words, we know that our cravings for baked goods and sweets have a physiological as well as a psychological basis. And while it's all well and good to ignore such cravings during the warmer months—the time for halters and short shorts—why not heed them in the February deep freeze, when coats and quilts may cover our cabooses but can't ever comfort our core selves the way cake and candy can?

With that question in mind, we set out in search of sweets to thaw our spirits—the richest, gooiest goodies around. Here's a sampling of what we found—and downed, bite by bite.

Clockwise from top: Flour's pain aux raisins, the Scharffen Berger double chocolate cookie, Flour's interior, sugar brioche buns

ATHAN'S

A charmingly old-fashioned sweet-shoppe aura surrounds Athan's in Brookline's Washington Square; crossing the neat, white corner threshold to enter the sunny, wood-floored interior, you half expect to see aisles lined with penny candy. The quaint surroundings don't prepare you for the sophisticated and elegant treats at this Mediterranean-influenced bakery; from crisp, lacy Florentines to intriguing fig gelato, everything is housemade. Especially chic—not to mention calorific—are the single-serving versions of Athan's mousse-filled layer cakes. About four to five inches square, these babies take the cake, so to speak, when it comes to indulgence. The Bolero ($3.95) is a gorgeous little milk chocolate cylinder with a pebbled surface; underneath the ganache is a sprinkling of almonds, and beneath that, a heaping of mousse sits atop a bed of sugar-syrup-soaked genoise, both plenty chocolaty but not the least bit cloying. Or take the black forest ($3.95), an oblong combo of chocolate genoise and black-cherry mousse, the lightness of which likewise keeps the sweetness in check. It's swathed in dark-chocolate shavings and sifted with powdered sugar. Last but not least are the dozen or so exquisite varieties of baklava. Nine bucks gets you a pound, or about 10 pieces. Some are studded with walnuts, some with pistachios; some are filled with chocolate, some rolled in shredded filo; and all are positively drenched in honey. Between Athan's ambience and your sugar-induced haze, you're sure to be transported to better days. 1621 Beacon St., Brookline (617-734-7028).

FLOUR BAKERY AND CAFÉ

If a bakery could single-handedly revive a whole neighborhood with its presence, what couldn't it do for you? When Flour opened a few years ago, the South End stretch of Washington Street was a commercial—and culinary—wasteland. Now, SoWa brimmeth over with bistros and gourmet shops, and Joanne Chang's bakery-café is at the symbolic heart of it all. Here at the cheery counter—where the menu is scrawled on blackboards in pastel chalk—it's all about brioche, the richest of yeast doughs, chock-full of whole eggs and butter. Pillowy and wonderfully eggy, brioche is the basis for Flour's superb pain aux raisins ($2.50), a tall, tender, generously iced, nautilus-shaped bun. Likewise simply yet richly flavored are the brioche au chocolat and sugar brioche buns ($2.50), the former filled and the latter dusted with their namesake ingredients. Flour also produces what may be the single most chocolaty cookie ever—the Scharffen Berger double chocolate ($1.50), which from the first bite tastes as though it contains more chocolate than chocolate itself does. One caveat: the goods go fast at Flour, especially on weekends, so get your fix early—it's bound to last you the whole day anyway. 1595 Washington St., Boston (617-267-4300).

LOVELY LOAVES

With the low-carb diet craze at its peak, even bread is beginning to seem as sinful as, say, mile-high pie. As long as that's the case, you might as well make your carb crimes count. Why feel guilty about white or wheat when you can go for stollen or focaccia? Bakeries these days are offering up loaves with all kinds of twists and flavor flourishes, so there are plenty of pleasures to choose from.

At Clear Flour Bakery, tucked away at the edge of Brookline near Brighton's Packard's Corner, a number of savory breads will do the starchy trick; these don't merely sit in your stomach, they kick back and channel-surf. Roasted potato–rosemary ($1.75-$3.50), for one—at once olive oil–smooth and peppery. Or corny polenta bread ($4) with not one but three cheeses (Parmesan, Romano and Asiago). Or focaccia-like rustic Italian fougasse, punchy with Gorgonzola and walnuts ($4.75).

Cheese also stars in several of the dense, wonderfully chewy loaves you'll find on the shelves at Big Sky Bread Co. in Newton Centre, from blue cheese–walnut to cheddar-garlic to Parmesan-pesto. But you'll also find some interesting sweet breads here. Babka is a Polish specialty traditionally served at Easter, flavored with orange peel and almonds. Almonds also appear in the bittersweet Swiss chocolate–almond bread. And cinnamon chips make for a neat variation on classic cinnamon-swirl bread.

Keep in mind that neither bakery makes all varieties daily; be sure to call ahead to check availability.

MIKE'S PASTRY

When it comes to bakeries in the North End, Mike's, however famous, is not necessarily the be-all and end-all. (That honor goes, arguably, to Maria's, whose enormous mostaccioli—like Fig Newtons gone wild with cocoa, diamond-shaped and chocolate-frosted—are worth a mention.) That said, since traditional Italian sweets aren't as gooey as we're used to in this country, the more Americanized array of treats at Mike's makes it just the place for a good old, down-and-dirty, come-what-may pig-out. Let's begin with the brownies, a few inches long on all sides and topped with a centimeter-plus of spot-on ganache. Mike's makes several types, but the best of the bunch are the peanut butter brownies ($1.50)—the smooth, peanutty stuff is thickly spread out just beneath the chocolate over a brownie that's more fudgy than cakelike. Then there's the candy selection. Best, of course, when they're freshly made (which admittedly isn't always), items like chocolate-covered cashew-caramel turtles ($2.75)—big as burger patties and chewy as all get-out—and M&M cups ($2.75), which are veritable demitasses of solid chocolate studded throughout with mini candies, could make even the sweetest tooth beg for mercy (and perhaps some Colgate). 300 Hanover St., Boston (617-742-3050).

FINALE

For many a sweets-savvy Bostonian, this "dessert-erie" is the first name in edible extravagance. To visit the take-out counter at either of its two stylishly appointed locations (in Park Plaza and Harvard Square) is to gaze upon lusciousness in all its myriad shapes and sizes. Still, some offerings are more boldly, blatantly luscious than others. As at Athan's, these cakes and tarts assume miniature forms that aren't just pick-me-ups, they're pick-me-up-and-carry-me-off-to-cloud-nines. The Peanut Butter Joy ($5.50) is a striking, comma-shaped concoction pairing moist chocolate buttermilk cake with a surprisingly subtle mousse that smacks of vanilla almost as much as peanut butter. The simply presented, near-black Dark Chocolate Decadence ($4.75) is Finale's espresso-tinged rendition of that neoclassic, the flourless truffle cake. Thoroughly dense and intense, it captures the very flavor you imagined your childhood mud pies would have. Meanwhile, the Cookie Monster in you will devour the rich white chocolate–macadamia ($2), all cocoa-buttery and unctuous with nut oil. 1 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-423-3184); 30 Dunster St., Cambridge (617-441-9797).

KAM LUNG BAKERY

With baked goods, "rich" needn't simply mean "fatty"; it can also indicate a level of opulence that turns a mere snack into a true treat. Case in point: the lotus seed–paste moon cakes ($2.50) at Chinatown's Kam Lung Bakery. The drum-shaped pastries are golden-brown and glossy, with surprisingly intricate embossed tops. Equally surprising is the amount of filling the delicate crust manages to contain. Biting into the mound of lotus seed paste, you'll experience a flavor something like musky caramel. The texture, however, is smoother, going down much more easily. Compared with the beautiful moon cakes, Kam Lung's strangely yellow-orange walnut cookies (50 cents) are coarse and homely; their claim to indulgence rests on their belly-boggling size, measuring about half a foot wide and more than an inch thick. According to tradition, these mildly nutty-sweet, crumbly disks, each topped with four walnut halves, bring good luck—so the bigger the better. If a few bites can end your winter blues, maybe a few more can bring an abrupt end to winter altogether. 77 Harrison Ave., Boston (617-542-2229). IB

GIRL WITH PEARLY HEARING

Ship Sooner* is Cambridge author Mary Sullivan's second novel.

Thirteen-year-old Ship Sooner is a girl afflicted (or blessed) with hearing so acute she has to wear ear protection to suppress the crunchingly loud sounds of life. The fatherless younger sister of moody and sarcastic Helen, Ship lives in her sister's shadow, ever hopeful but mostly cast aside. At times, she chooses to tune into the secret specialness of her ultrasensitive hearing, and she often learns much more than she bargained for. Ship listens in on her friend Brian and his blustering, abusive father. And to Ship's horror, she witnesses a sex scene between Helen, her boyfriend and, eventually, lurking Brian himself. It's arousing and disturbing, and she feels betrayed. A reader must suspend disbelief to enter into the fantasy dreamland of the book's long, dramatic end section. Ship finds an abandoned baby in the woods, partly a metaphor for her own loneliness and her equally strong need to be a protector and worthwhile person. In the climax, the secret of the baby's origin is revealed.

ELECTRIFY YOUR OWN ENERGY

Daena Giardella offers workshops in improvisation Monday mornings, beginning March 15 at 10 am. Not just for actors, the seven-week workshop, taking place in West Newton, costs $540. For information, call 617-924-9596.

Improvisation, says Daena Giardella, is "the art of acting from the moment." Giardella has the requisite quick wit, but her classes emphasize the methods behind improv's madness. Mixing the personal (scary upcoming job interview, emptying nest, divorce) with the external and universal (George Bush, earthquakes), the improviser learns how to build a monologue that arcs from beginning to middle to end. Scenes are developed, sometimes based on a suggestion from Giardella, and class members join in, jamming on the spot. These improvisations tap into the interesting momentum brought on by conflict, that bedeviling element that provides the vivacity of drama. Giardella helps participants track the flow from "breakdown" ("Oh, I can't do it!") to breakthrough, then on to assimilation, whereby the dreaded inner critic, now transformed, actually provides energy and encouragement. Standing in your own spotlight and feeling the texture of expression and connection, building character—right there!—scriptless, is a good feeling.

THE NORTH END OF SOMERVILLE

Sessa's, at 412–424 South Highland Ave., Somerville, is a truly Italian grocery emporium. Call 617-776-6687.

Sessa's is this kind of place: When a loyal shopper comes in the door, owner Giancarlo Sessa is already one step ahead of her, rushing to slice up a package of succulent, paper-thin soppressata—her favorite. Giant bells of provolone hang from the ceiling alongside swinging panettones, fascinatingly sneering dried fish and festive strings of peppers. Prosciutto, cured for 14 months, looks beautifully antique overhead. A gigantic block of provolone cheese yields its contents in chunks and slices. Local Italian insiders swirl around here, requesting prosciutto cotto with rosemary, stingingly fresh parmesan slices, fat mozzarella balls and homemade sauces that are ladled in the back room: marinara, meat or mushroom. The tightly packed aisles offer more than 25 kinds of olive oil and a huge sweep—80 varieties—of pasta, the starriest brands being Del Verde and Mennucci. The pastas range from infinitesimal dot-sized varieties to ethereal angel hair and fatter fettucini, plain and whole wheat, and such specialties as oval artichoke-flavored pieces. These Giancarlo recommends cooked with mascarpone, artichoke hearts and toasted pine nuts. Then, for dessert, try cold, luscious, layered tiramisu. Also available: wide flower-painted bowls and earthenware garlic roasters. It may be a few miles from the North End, but Italo-authenticity rules here.

FINE-TUNING ANTHEM

Chef Robert Fathman has his way with comfort food at the former Commonwealth Fish & Beer Company

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Anthem dominates the corner of Portland and Valenti streets near the FleetCenter, its entrance marked by a large, stylized letter A. The only vestiges of the Commonwealth Fish & Beer Company, which previously occupied the site, are the copper-clad HVAC ducts running along a portion of the high black ceiling—the massive copper brewing kettles are gone, as are the long, shiny copper-topped tables. White tablecloths are covered with brown butcher paper, to suggest the casual atmosphere appropriate to pre-FleetCenter event dining, but soft, absorbent white cotton napkins add a touch of comfort and class.

There is nothing casual about Anthem's oversized wine glasses, which if they are not Riedel are a reasonable facsimile. A well-put-together wine list includes the 2000 Bommarito cabernet sauvignon ($13 a glass), a big wine with intense fruit, good balance and a fine bouquet. More down-to-earth and affordable was the Folie à Deux, Menage à Trois ($21 a bottle), a simple, grapey beverage good for quaffing. Somewhat ponderous, it nevertheless was equal to the task of standing up to Anthem's savory meat courses. Nor would "casual" be a fair descriptor of Robert Fathman's cuisine. Formerly of the Federalist and Trio (and still overseeing the menu at Azure), Fathman produces dishes that are always well conceived and professionally executed, and at times inspired. Only some of the presentations—addressed below—disappointed.

One starter, the fried calamari ($8.25), took the standard appetizer to a new level. Lightly battered and flash fried, the crisp squid was accompanied by a provocative salsa of chopped jalapeño peppers, tomato, papaya and broad-leafed parsley, all moistened with rice wine. Perhaps my favorite appetizer was the spinach and artichoke fondue ($9). Served in a black cast iron fondue dish, it featured distinctive artichoke flavor, felicitously combined with engagingly herbaceous spinach and tangy cheese. Chunks of hard-crusted, toasted bread made a terrific vehicle for soaking up this delicious gruel, and I consumed every morsel and drop. Similarly creative and tastebud-provoking, the salad of endives and chicory ($9) combined warm halves of fingerling potatoes; green beans; a couple of spears of asparagus; smoky, meaty pancetta; and a perfectly poached egg on top of fresh, pleasantly bitter endives and chicory, all lathered with a whole-grain mustard dressing.

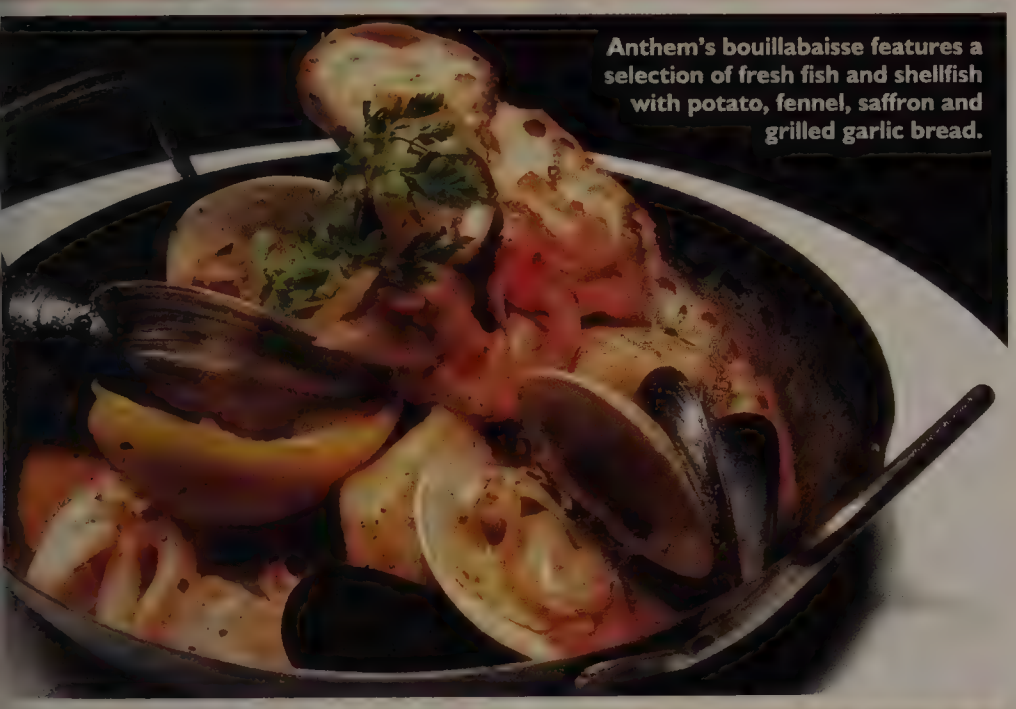
The pu-pu platter includes fried tuna maki, seaweed salad, sweet and spicy braised pork ribs and tempura shrimp and vegetables.



Anthem's main courses did not quite sustain the high quality of the appetizers. Two of the main course offerings I tried soon after Anthem's opening—presumably while Fathman and sous chef Sildo Junior were still fine-tuning the menu—disappointed. The half roast chicken ($14.25) was moist but bland, lacking the garlic and herb–encrusted savoriness that the average French bistro kitchen turns out with consistent regularity. Fortunately, the dish was rescued by tasty French-fried sweet potatoes and first-rate, garlicky bok choy. Another weak main course early on was the "fish, fish and shellfish stew" ($18), a cioppino of sea scallops, shrimp, mussels, calamari, swordfish, tomato and onions. An overly timid dose of garlic and a surprising lack of assertive herbs left the dish dull and uninteresting, despite its impressive ingredient list. By the time of my subsequent visits, this dish had been renamed "bouillabaisse" and re-engineered, with the garlic ratcheted up several notches and a generous infusion of vibrant herbs. The anticipated saffron, however—promised by the menu and essential to classic bouillabaisse—escaped my notice.

My biggest quarrel with Anthem's main courses was not with the merits of the individual ingredients, but with the way they are mushed together (in a fashion critiqued several years ago in a GQ article that coined the phase "the Boston Glob"). Bouillabaisse, of course, is conceived and rightfully served as a stew. Not so the other dishes. The Niman Ranch pork shank ($17), for example, an impressive cut of tender, flavorful, fall-off-the-bone meat, had to share its oval plate with a bottom layer of polenta and a jungle of broccoli and broccoli rabe. These garnishes would have been enhancements if they could have been savored individually. While I am not advocating cafeteria-style divided plates, some respect for the distinctive tastes and textures of starch and vegetable accompaniments is clearly warranted. The most egregious layering and stacking of ingredients afflicted the "mighty meatloaf" ($9.50), a moist, delicious combination of beef and Italian and Spanish sausage served on a thick slice of toast and under an inch-high layer of mashed potatoes like a shepherd's pie. The meatloaf muddle was further exacerbated by the curious mélange of vegetables with which it shared the plate, a mix that included cucumber, carrot, cooked zucchini, cauliflower and red pepper. Those ingredients ranged in temperature from warm to refrigerator-cold.

Anthem's desserts included its much talked about "fried twinky" ($5), a whimsical idea that may or may not have begun with an actual Hostess Twinkie. It was a pastry cream–filled sponge cake fried crisp and served with a mountain of whipped cream and luscious fresh berries. More to my taste was the apple pan dowdy ($6), firm chunks of apple in a syrupy sauce with sweetened crust, served in a small, black cast iron skillet and crowned by a giant Anthem serves up hip comfort food in a casual atmosphere.

Anthem's bouillabaisse features a selection of fresh fish and shellfish with potato, fennel, saffron and grilled garlic bread.

Szechuan peppercorn-crusted seared tuna salad with roasted tomato, pine nuts and kalamata olive tapenade scoop of vanilla ice cream. It proved more than ample for sharing.

Service at Anthem, rendered by a young wait staff smartly attired in black, was friendly and attentive, but since I arrived on all of my visits after the crowds had departed for the tip-off or face-off, I never got to observe them under pressure. Their energy and enthusiasm, however, suggested that they could rise to the occasion. Clearly Anthem will do more than satisfy the basic needs of hungry, thirsty patrons of FleetCenter contests and spectacles. The culinary concepts and insights of Fathman, as effected by his skillful sous chef Junior, should create fans in their own right. iB

Parallel parties...Meet Mariposa... Bam-Aid...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

On the same weekend, in two very different cities, two chef-centered events kept the focus on major fun while raising major funds to fight hunger.

Kicking off the weekend was Boston's annual Anthony Spinazzola Foundation Gala Festival of Food & Wine, whose executive director, Michelline Dufort, oversaw the assembly and distribution of 4,500 gift bags to this year's attendees. Back in 1999, recalls Dufort, the unthinkable happened, when the supply of gift bags was depleted prematurely, resulting in grumpy guests. Particularly unhappy were those who are dedicated to collecting a Spin wine glass from each year's gala.

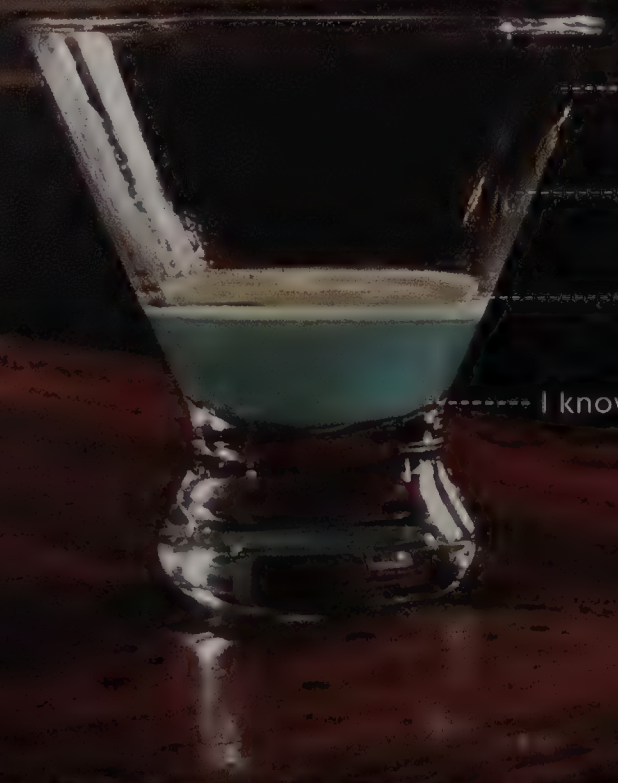
"You wouldn't believe how many people come up to me and tell me they have all 19 years of wine glasses," says Dufort. If some of those devoted collectors were lucky enough to rate as "VIP attendees—six to eight hundred of our nearest and dearest friends," says Dufort—their gift bags were conveniently placed in their cars as they arrived at the event this year. Is there a gap in your collection? Too bad—nothing's on eBay yet.

Some people go to Spinazzola for the food and wine, others for the souvenir glasses.

More importantly, this year's event raised more than $600,000 to support the Spinazzola Foundation's culinary apprenticeship and other programs. Special features are in the works for next year's 20th gala, says Dufort: "We're producing our own documentary, behind the scenes." And how about a commemorative carafe to match all those wineglasses?

The next day, in Houston, on the eve of Super Bowl Sunday, Chez Henri chef/owner Paul O'Connell was cooking alongside such nationally known chefs as Susan Spicer and Bob Kinkead at a $400-a-plate fund-raising dinner called Taste of the NFL. Since 1992, the event has raised over $4 million to benefit hunger relief, with funds distributed through Second Harvest.

The day after serving up smoked cod and lobster chowder with chili lime butter ("people loved it, went crazy for it," says O'Connell), the chef caught the big game in person to top off a week of eating "lots of barbecue" and being lavished with freebies, from beef jerky to stuffed animals.



Now that he's back in town, O'Connell is consulting with Suzanne Mermelstein as she prepares to launch her first business, a bakery called Mariposa, in Cambridge's Central Square. Slated to open in late March or early April, Mariposa will combine the influence of Mermelstein's Eastern European heritage—think soft, not crusty, breads, such as potato poppyseed rolls—with what O'Connell calls a very California sensibility. Hot lunch entrées will be aimed at attracting the "techie guys in khakis" who work in the neighborhood, says O'Connell.

Finally, for the rest of February, Lala Rokh on Beacon Hill is offering diners a sweet opportunity to provide help for reconstruction efforts in the earthquake-devastated region of Bam in Iran. One hundred percent of proceeds from every order of a special dessert—Persian rice pudding served with a red pear and cardamom compote, drizzled with a quince glaze—will benefit the Help Bam relief fund established by Lala Rokh owners Babak Bina and Azita Bina-Seibel. Rock to the music of Billy Joel in Movin' Out.

TUE./MARCH 2–SAT./APRIL 10

Performing Arts: The Entertainer and the Modern Woman

For ABBA fans (like ourselves), Mamma Mia! was a blast, with audience members dancing in the aisles and singing along to "Dancing Queen" and "Fernando." Billy Joel fans will take the same delight in Movin' Out—his new collaboration with choreographer Twyla Tharp. Unlike Mamma Mia! though, Movin' Out focuses equally on dance and music. (Joel's songs are sung by live performers—not the Piano Man himself.) The plot follows the lives of five friends over two decades. Time magazine called Movin' Out the No. 1 show of the year. We'll call Tharp and Joel the duo of the hour: She's Got a Way, and he's Easy Money, willing to Go to Extremes. As for us, we're Keeping the Faith. Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston (617-931-2787). www.broadwayinboston.com. Mon.–Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 and 7:30 pm. $30–$87.

The Circus Is in Town

If you're a short-attention-span concert-goer, this rock show–meets–sideshow is for you. The Bill's Bar event is hosted by zany street performers the Daredevil Chicken Club, who take the stage between sets by rock and hip-hop acts. The Chicken Club's shenanigans always focus on rubber-chicken tricks, but their performances also often include acrobatics, giant juggling balls, a flaming stolen wallet and hypnosis. The DCC isn't the only unique act on the bill: Gina Marie, a New York photographer who has worked for the NYPD forensics department, performs the art of nawa shibari, a type of traditional Japanese rope tying. Four bands—electro pop outfit Mindfield; hip-hop act Earth Defense Force; the loud and raucous One of Us and rock outfit Fluttr—fill in the gaps. The racket starts at 7 pm. 5.5 Lansdowne St., Boston (800-594-8499). www.billsbar.com. $10 for 18+, $8 for 21+.

SUN./FEB. 29

CityScope: Party with Oscar

Will Peter Jackson and his Hobbits finally win the big Oscar? Will we get to see Bill Murray make an acceptance speech? How do you pronounce Shohreh Aghdashloo? It's always more fun to find out when you're at an Oscar party surrounded by fellow film lovers (and those who love to rank on the celebs' fashion sense). Ever-swanky Saint is throwing an Oscar Night America Benefit, where you can watch the Academy Awards and at the same time help support the Ellie Fund's fight against breast cancer. The party includes canapés, a silent auction, live music, door prizes and a Sam Adams beer sampling. As you'd expect, the dress is Hollywood glitz and glam. Across the river, the Brattle Theatre hosts its much more subdued Brattle Oscar Party, which features the live telecast projected on the Brattle's big screen, plus snacks, drinks and an auction. Expect lots of loud comments and more than a bit of heckling during the Red Carpet Revue. Both parties promise to continue until the last Oscar is doled out. Saint, 90 Exeter St., Boston (617-426-3339). www.elliefund.org. 6 pm. $40 in advance, $55 at the door if available. Brattle Theatre, 40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-876-6837). $50.

FRI./FEB. 20–SUN./MARCH 7

Performing Arts: Gold Rush Redux

Resurrecting a Broadway blockbuster hit from the late 1970s (based on a hilarious English satire from the 17th century) and hiring a team of actors that includes Academy Award winner Richard Dreyfuss, Bronson Pinchot (better known as Balki Bartokomous from the TV sitcom Perfect Strangers) and Eric Stoltz (Mask, Pulp Fiction) would seem to make for a winning combo. But Bostonians get to be the real judges as Sly Fox makes its pre-Broadway engagement here Feb. 20–March 7. Larry Gelbart's tale of greed and guile is set in San Francisco at the dawn of the Gold Rush. Dreyfuss stars as devious con man Foxwell J. Sly, who sets out to swindle as many people as he can. Bonus cast member: Elizabeth Berkley (Jessie from Saved by the Bell). Shubert Theatre, 265 Tremont St., Boston (800-447-7400). www.telecharge.com. MBTA: Green Line to Boylston, Orange Line to New England Medical Center. Tue.–Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 and 7:30 pm. $38-$88.

Richard Dreyfuss stars in Sly Fox.

CityScope: Bra-vo!

The press release announcing Bomboa's Mardi Gras party—a celebrity bra auction to benefit the Avon Foundation Breast Cancer Crusade—reads, "Bomboa owners Kasey Anton, Carlos Hidalgo and Felino Samson will donate one dollar for every brassiere shown." Contrary to what you might guess, guests are not encouraged to lift up their shirts and flash their foundations, says publicist Rebecca White. They are, however, invited to bring a bra—a training bra, a corset or anything in between—and show it to the threesome. (We think our first interpretation sounds like a lot more fun.) A special collection of autographed celebrity bras will be auctioned off to raise additional funds for the Avon Walk for Breast Cancer. Among the contributors: The View commentator, Survivor champ and Boston College alum Elisabeth Filarski Hasselbeck. (Will it be bigger than a rubber band??) If it's anything like last year's event, when bras were hanging from the bar and light fixtures, anything goes. 35 Stanhope St., Boston (617-236-6363). 5:30 pm–2 am.

When Rocky Met Sally

Meg Ryan's boxing movie has no punch

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Against the Ropes takes a square peg and tries to bash it into a round hole. Not surprisingly, the results are clumsy and unsuccessful. The film is based on the real-life story of Jackie Kallen, the brash Cleveland woman who became the most successful female manager in boxing. Full of awkward transitions and unfortunate clichés, however, it does what Hollywood so often does—turns interesting reality into by-the-numbers drama.

You know you're in for a bumpy ride when Against the Ropes abruptly segues from its 1972 prologue—in which young Kallen gets scolded by her fighter-trainer father for showing interest in boxing—to the present day. Kallen (Meg Ryan) is now secretary to the cartoonish Italian-American (Joe Cortese) who runs the Cleveland Coliseum, an arena that frequently hosts boxing nights, we're led to believe. There's nothing about this woman's life between 8 and 38, and something immediately feels amiss.

Charles S. Dutton, Meg Ryan and Omar Epps team up in the new boxing movie, Against the Ropes.

Kallen—whose two main traits are her flat Midwest accent and her trashy outfits—does all the work, but gets none of the credit from her boss or from arrogant Sam LaRocca (Tony Shalhoub), the promoter (and "made man") who controls boxing in Cleveland. The puzzling relationship between Kallen and these men is indicative of flaws in Cheryl Edwards' (Save the Last Dance) screenplay. It's intent on having us root for Kallen, yet it totally dulls her female-empowerment story. The short-sighted attempt to make her look good by portraying her adversaries as stooges actually serves to undermine sympathy for the heroine, given her years-long association with them. The cartoonishness continues with Kallen's entry into managing, when LaRocca belittles her during an argument and challenges her boxing knowledge by offering to sell her the contract to an underachieving fighter for $1.

Eventually, Kallen ends up managing Luther (Omar Epps), a ghetto thug whom she thinks she can turn into a boxer after she sees him pummel the fighter whose contract she bought. Defying her boss (who fires her) and LaRocca (who won't give Luther a bout in Cleveland), she enlists a wise old trainer (Charles S. Dutton, who also directed) and starts moving Luther up the middleweight ladder. This middle section is easily the best part of the movie, but it's dragged down by contrivances and confusing turns—such as Kallen opening her own boxing gym while she has just one fighter under contract and her life is supposedly in hock. The action moves to an unconvincing climax when Kallen, who fast becomes a sports celebrity, gets starry-eyed from all the media attention and loses the trust of Luther, who feels overlooked. To soothe frustrated Luther, she sells his contract to LaRocca, provided LaRocca gives Luther a title shot against the middleweight champ he also manages.

The subsequent big-fight climax, in which LaRocca wants to make Luther look bad, is so bungled that it almost reaches the so-bad-it's-good level. Almost. Amazingly, the movie has Dutton's old trainer still handling Luther during this fight (even though the trainer is Kallen's guy), while LaRocca quivers in his boots because Kallen shows up at the fight to cheer on Luther. (Are we supposed to think LaRocca's afraid she's gonna slug someone?). The post-fight last scene then actually offers up a deadly speedball of the mustiest clichés imaginable: the slow clap of approval and the freeze-frame ending. Oh brother.

Part of the problem with Against the Ropes is that it's such a fabrication. It turns out the real Kallen has kids, unlike the movie's; the real Kallen is Jewish, the movie's is not (if you cast Meg Ryan and don't tell us her character is Jewish, she's not); the real Kallen was a sportswriter, not a secretary; and the real Kallen was a publicist representing such fighters as Tommy Hearns before she became a manager. (Meanwhile, Luther is apparently fictional. And there was a Cleveland Coliseum, but it closed in the 1990s). I didn't know any of this before seeing the movie, but it explains why Against the Ropes feels like half-hearted hogwash. There's actually a scene in which Luther asks Kallen why she's never had kids. It's supposed to be poignant, since she's become a surrogate mother/sister to him, but no wonder the scene fails. Everyone involved knew the generic story they were filming had little resemblance to Kallen's genuinely interesting real life, and it shows. Why no one saw this problem before cameras rolled is one of the multiplex's eternal mysteries. IB

Along Came Polly ★★
That old Hollywood myth about opposites attracting gets a serviceable but unremarkable treatment in this Ben Stiller–Jennifer Aniston romantic comedy. He's a risk-averse analyst for an insurance company whose new wife (Debra Messing) leaves him for another man on their honeymoon; she's a ragamuffin who never plans anything in advance. When he has to choose between the two, which TV star will Ben spend the rest of his life with? This is just the latest in the growing list of "put Ben Stiller in uncomfortable situations" comedies, and unfortunately, it often plays more like Duplex than Meet the Parents. It's buoyed somewhat by the amusing supporting performances of Philip Seymour Hoffman, Alec Baldwin and Hank Azaria. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Big Bounce ★★★
Owen Wilson could make just about anything entertaining—well, except an I Spy movie. He's very amusing as a trouble-magnet drifter in this adaptation of an early Elmore Leonard novel. The book is Leonard before he really found his sharp thriller/comedy voice, and the movie definitely shares the novel's flimsiness. But Wilson and the Hawaii setting have the laid-back mood that makes this crime comedy work. So does newcomer Sara Foster, whose playful performance as the beach bunny who drags the drifter into a robbery scheme adds breezy insolence to the mix. The colorful cast also includes Morgan Freeman, Charlie Sheen, Willie Nelson and Harry Dean Stanton. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Big Fish ★★★
Forget about the present-day drama between a blustery dying Southerner (Albert Finney) and his semi-estranged grown son (Billy Crudup) in Tim Burton's latest. The real action is in the tall tales about the dying man's earlier life. These sequences featuring Ewan McGregor are the first thing anyone will remember from this movie. Burton gives these scenes an eye-popping heightened reality, while McGregor's lively performance might remind you of another optimistic dreamer from a Burton movie—Johnny Depp's Ed Wood. With his performance as a swaggering Camelot-era man-about-town in Down with Love and now this role, McGregor has improbably shown himself to be a crackerjack portrayer of American gumption. The rest of the movie falters, but McGregor's scenes are bull's-eyes. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

City of God ★★★½
A quartet of Oscar nominations has brought back this Brazilian drama, one of last year's highlights. Bold and brutal from start to finish, its dog-eat-dog world and stylistic energy recall Mean Streets and Amores Perros as its stories criss-cross and bubble into each other, and as 18-year-old hero Rocket (Alexandre Rodrigues) tries to somehow get out of his crime-rocked neighborhood alive. Full of humanity, ambiguity and belligerence, it's a wonderfully orchestrated car crash you just can't take your eyes off of. (At Copley Square, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Cold Mountain ★★½
With its romance set against the backdrop of war, its female bonding and its overgroomed star, Anthony Minghella's adaptation of Charles Frazier's novel is one part Last of the Mohicans, one part Fried Green Tomatoes and one part infomercial for whatever line of cosmetics Nicole Kidman is wearing. By default, this is the best of the season's big dramatic epics, clearly besting The Last Samurai and House of Sand and Fog. Much of it works: the budding romance of Kidman's and Jude Law's characters interrupted by the Civil War, the strife that besets all the characters because of the war, the supporting characters played by the likes of Philip Seymour Hoffman, Natalie Portman, Ray Winstone and Jack White of the White Stripes. But while Kidman's minister's daughter has her civilized life collapse around her and gets pushed to the brink of starvation and poverty, before being aided by Renee Zellweger's Ma Kettle–meets–Peppermint Patty farmgirl, the actress always looks as if she's made up to go shopping. It's hard to feel her plight in your gut because of it. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Company ★
Robert Altman's drama set within the Joffrey Ballet of Chicago is perhaps the veteran director's worst film. There's little attempt to develop the characters, conflict is almost nonexistent, and the dance numbers look like a cross between Mummenschanz and a Fruit of the Loom commercial. Although many of the company's real dancers play supporting roles, Barbara Turner's script offers no insight into this insular community. The characters, such as the imperious artistic director (Malcolm McDowell), a second-tier dancer trying to get to the next level (Neve Campbell), and her cook boyfriend (James Franco), are one-dimensional at best. And Altman inserts most of the dance numbers in seemingly random fashion, without context. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

The Dreamers ★½
Who would've thought an NC-17 story about having sex and loving old movies could be so grating and uninteresting? Bernardo Bertolucci's tale of an American college student (DiCaprio look-alike Michael Pitt) in 1968 Paris who discovers movies at the Cinémathèque Française and sex with a French movie buff (Eva Green) is full of mildly annoying characters and pointless cinematic in-jokes (complete with naggingly literal inclusion of clips for every reference). The French woman has a too-intense relationship with her brother (Louis Garrel), and the plot of the outsider pulled into a pre-existing duo's heady world makes this a pale imitation of Performance, a better movie from the era this one wishes to re-create. And all the movie name-checks are sophomoric, even if you know the references; if you don't know them, this must be like nails on a blackboard. (At Harvard Square.)

The Fog of War ★★★
In Cambridge moviemaker Errol Morris' series of interviews with former JFK and LBJ secretary of defense Robert McNamara, the shrewd technocrat doesn't unburden himself of any more responsibility for the Vietnam quagmire that occurred under his watch. McNamara is too cagey for that. But Morris finds fertile territory in McNamara's observations on human nature, war and politics. (Morris has subtitled the movie "Eleven Lessons from the Life of Robert S. McNamara.") When McNamara talks about the Vietnam effort failing because the American government didn't know enough to empathize with the Vietnamese, it's hard not to think of Iraq. And when McNamara talks about the moral dilemmas of making decisions in times of strife, he sheds light on all the political crossroads that have turned presidents' heads gray. More than a dry Q&A, Fog unfolds in Morris' typically cinematic style, featuring montages of archival footage, cockeyed camera angles and Philip Glass' churning music. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Japanese Story ★★
Nothing like a near-death experience to break the romantic ice. At least that's what this Australian film would have you believe. The geologist (Toni Collette) and the married Japanese businessman (Gotaro Tsunashima) she's assigned to escort to remote mineral mines can't stand each other initially. Then they almost die when their rental car gets stuck in the desert, and once they get it moving it's not long before they're having a fling. The Brief Encounter–like story then goes for an emotional home run that it just can't pull off, because the depth of the relationship never quite convinces. (At Copley Place.)

Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King ★★
Peter Jackson has once again given us an expansive spoof of bombastic, medieval fantasy adventures: the furrowed brows, the swords and sorcery, the creatures, the hair extensions. Oh, that's right, it's not supposed to be silly. Jackson is obviously an imaginative, capable director, but after three movies and seven hours, I still don't care a lick about anything that happens to any of these solemn, solemn people. The LOTR trilogy epitomizes the sort of movie that wins technical Academy Awards but that no one takes seriously. Yet for reasons I just can't understand, a lot of folks have taken these films seriously. (Come on, isn't Tolkien's attractive-human-heroes-versus-ugly-Orc-villains plot just a tad juvenile?). Maybe Jackson can go back to making interesting movies like Heavenly Creatures and Forgotten Silver now. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lost in Translation ★★★½
Sofia Coppola dealt with shared pain in her 2000 directorial debut, The Virgin Suicides, and she conjures up a similar funny-sad tone in her tale of two Americans (Bill Murray, Scarlett Johansson) adrift in Tokyo. He's a washed-up movie star making a bundle endorsing Japanese booze; she's the wife of a work-consumed photographer (Giovanni Ribisi). They're staying at the same hotel and killing time at the same hotel bar, and their misery loves company. The characters make a great movie couple, although their relationship is platonic (with its share of sexual tension). Murray gives a Buster Keaton–like, sad-clown performance built mainly around physical and especially facial reactions to absurd situations, and Johansson is a little heartbreaker. (At Copley Place and suburbs.)

Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World ★★★
An intense, eye-popping opening battle and director Peter Weir's realistic storytelling help this naval epic sail over dull patches, gabby interludes and ho-hum subplots. The level of authenticity is so much higher than any mere piece of spectacle in this 1805 story of the crew of an English ship that is attacked by a French ship, and then spends the rest of the movie tracking it to get revenge. Russell Crowe plays the battle-wise captain and Paul Bettany is the ship's inquisitive scientist, and though these friends' dialogues about the merits of science can't compare with the action sequences, Crowe especially breathes great life into his character. For once, the special effects serve the story in a big movie, and not the other way around. (At Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

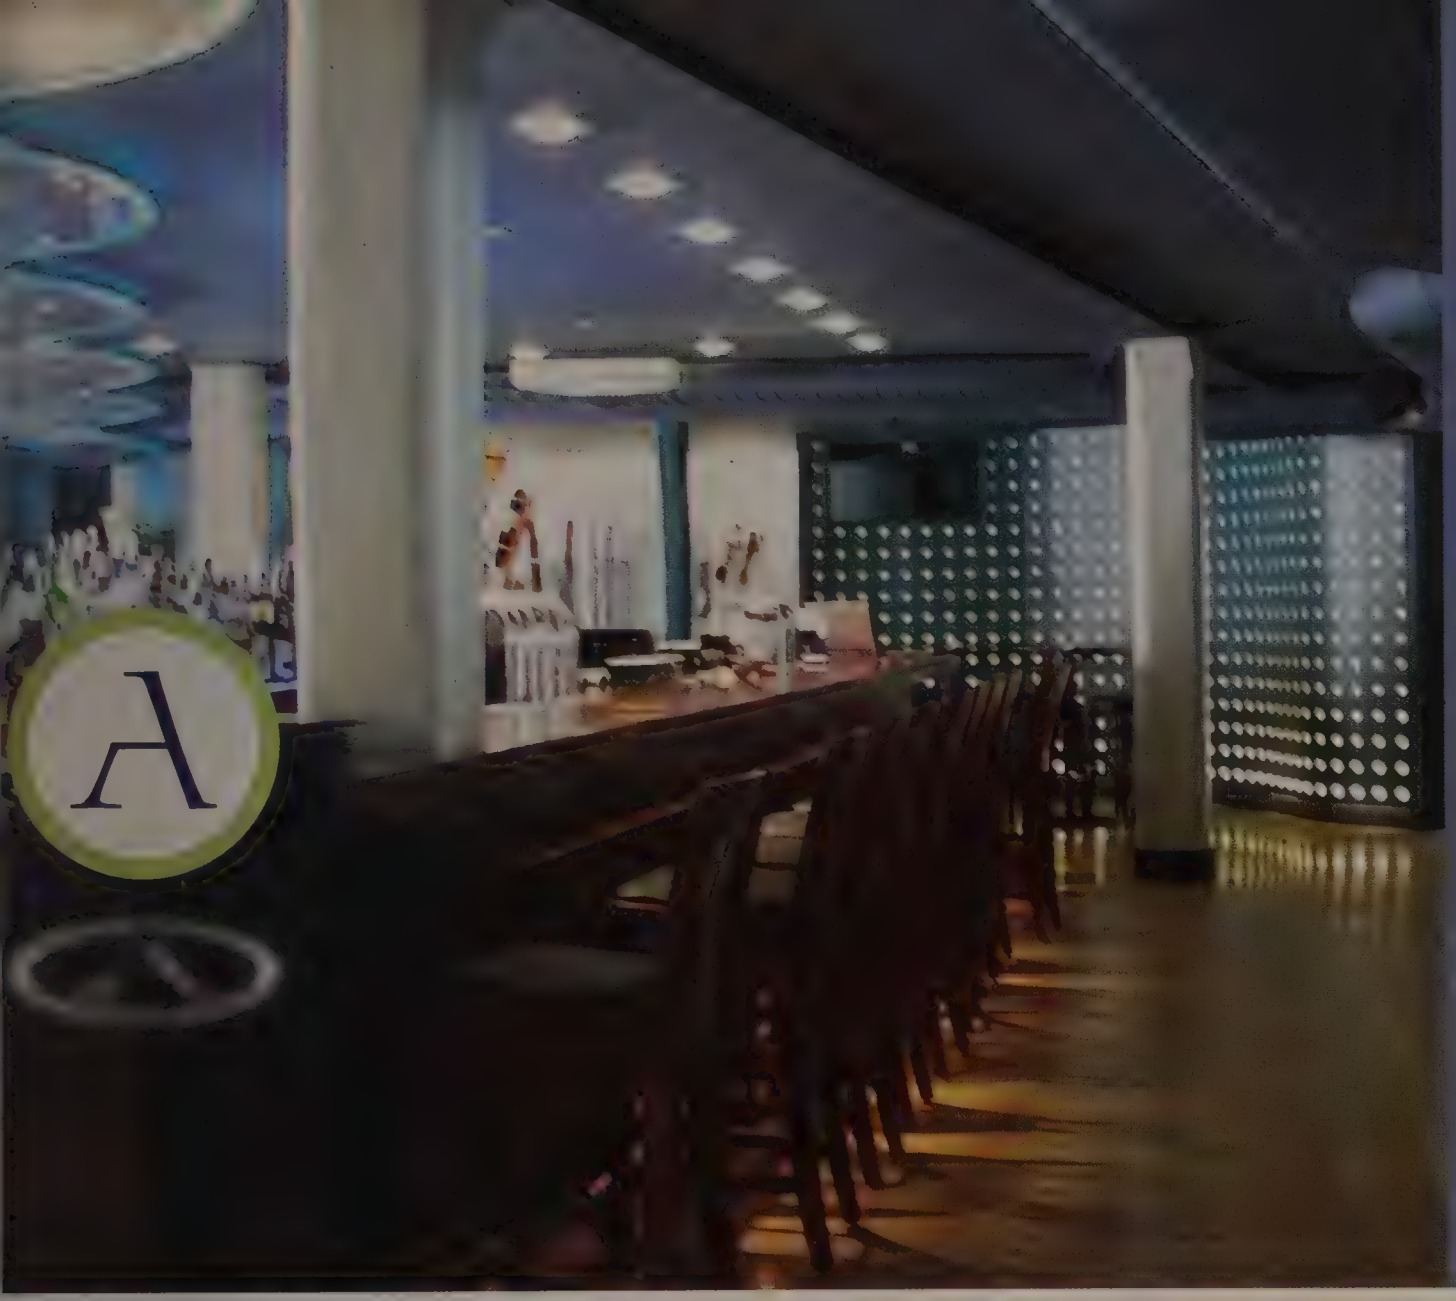
Monster ★★
No matter how hard it tries, and no matter how successfully Charlize Theron transforms herself into less attractive, much rougher Aileen Wuornos—the prostitute executed by Florida for killing seven men—this docudrama isn't nearly as sympathetic or as interesting as Aileen Wuornos: The Selling of a Serial Killer, Nick Broomfield's decade-old documentary. In the docudrama, Wuornos is a much-abused woman who decides to try her luck with women after she meets a younger lesbian (Christina Ricci). But with no other way to make money, she keeps hooking, and after a john gets violent, she kills him in self-defense. Then she continues to kill. Although you feel her rage, the movie's Wuornos is a little too dumb to sympathize with (she keeps riding around in her victims' cars), and Theron fails to provide the spark that might make her more fascinating than stupid. The movie also puts all its emotional eggs in the basket of the doomed lesbian affair—which fails to be the riveting tragedy writer-director Patty Jenkins wants it to be. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

My Architect ★★★
Much like last year's The Stone Reader, Nathaniel Kahn's new film is documentary as compelling quest. Kahn's mission is to learn more about his father, architect Louis Kahn. The elder Kahn died in 1974, when Nathaniel was a boy, and it turns out he had three families that he juggled. (He remained married to the same woman, while fathering children with two others.) The movie's drama is in its depiction of someone who was world-class in his field, yet whose personal life was a farce. The filmmaker struggles to understand how his mother and Louis Kahn's other families could tolerate such a situation, as he, like them, expresses his love for the man. With no easy answers, Kahn is left to look for answers in his father's work, a search that takes him from Philadelphia to Bangladesh. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Mystic River ★★
As is usually the case with adaptations of books, Clint Eastwood's Mystic River retains nearly all the plot of Dennis Lehane's novel but jettisons much of the detail that enriched that plot. In this case, that means the movie primarily follows the investigation into the murder of a 19-year-old woman. But the murderer was fairly easy to pick out in Lehane's book, and the case was just an excuse to explore the emotional wounds of the three childhood friends pushed back together by the crime—the father (Sean Penn), the detective (Kevin Bacon) and the prime suspect (Tim Robbins). As a result, much of the drama falls flat, and the whole thing is about as dull and gray as the typically murky Eastwood-movie cinematography. (At Fenway, Copley Place, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

21 Grams ★★
Director Alejandro Gonzalez Inarritu used time to great effect in his bracing debut, Amores Perros. In his follow-up (his first American movie), his use of nonlinear structure doesn't go so smoothly. Again he blends three stories—of a newly widowed woman (Naomi Watts), a born-again ex-con (Benicio Del Toro) and a terminally-ill professor (Sean Penn). But the first half of the film is so hyper that it's hard to get into it. The action jumps so often in time, and among the three characters, that it lacks a center. When the movie finally settles down, and we see the three lives intersect, the action gets genuinely dramatic at last, and Watts' raw performance is especially compelling. But that first half is a big price to pay to get to the second. (At Copley Place.)

The Weather Underground ★★★½
This year, the Oscar nominations for Best Documentary have actually gone to some good movies (not always the case). Sam Green and Bill Siegel's look at the Weathermen, the early-1970s radicals who sought to "bring the war home" by bombing empty buildings in the military-industrial complex, is one of them. The movie includes some amazing vintage footage, especially that with charismatic leader Bernardine Dohrn, as well as present-day visits with many of the radicals, who offer an interesting range of opinion on their former activities. (At the Museum of Fine Arts.)



You Got Served ★½
If it's called You Got Served, why do I feel as if I got punk'd by this silly little excuse for product placement? (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The soul sisters of Floetry find common poetry between basketball and music

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Marsha Ambrosius is the "songstress" who primarily sings. Natalie Stewart is the "floacist" who mostly flows with the spoken word. Together, they're Floetry, a British-born duo that blends soul, hip-hop, jazz and poetry in a way that's more straight-up than eccentric male counterparts OutKast.

Just don't get the idea that Floetry wants to make itself any easier to define through its self-styled terminology.

"We always knew we wanted to own our language," Stewart says from the duo's Philadelphia home base the night before Floetry began a national tour opening for kindred spirit and longtime supporter Erykah Badu (the tour stops at the Orpheum March 6). "If you coin your own words, no one can tell you what it is that you're supposed to do and not supposed to do."

Ambrosius adds of her descriptor, "People say, 'What's that mean? You're a singer?' No, I'm the songstress. And for Nat, it's 'Does that mean you're a rapper or an MC or a poet?' Nah, it means she's the floacist. Just take that for what it is, and you kind of make yourself as you go along. And you can always grow 'cause you're very much your own."

Floetry has truly grown since Ambrosius and Stewart moved to the U.S., starting in Atlanta, then settling in Philly. Working in a studio owned by Will Smith's onetime partner "Jazzy Jeff" Townes, the duo's work caught the ear of Michael Jackson, who recruited them to join him in the studio to record Ambrosius' song "Butterflies" for his 2001 album, Invincible. "It was a blur," Ambrosius says. "I don't believe it half the time. I just look at the [platinum] plaque in my front room."

Then came the duo's 2002 debut, Floetic, which earned three Grammy nominations for the group and sold half a million copies behind airplay of both the title track and "Say Yes."

Long before the pair merged poetry and music, Ambrosius and Stewart met in their early teens through a mutual love of basketball. (Ironically, the group's manager is J. Erving, son of Philadelphia 76ers legend Julius "Dr. J" Erving.)

"We were two people from different sides of South London who showed up on the basketball court and grew to know each other as friends through our interests," says Ambrosius, 26.

"We perform like we play ball," Stewart, 25, adds of the pair's intuitive way of shadowing and complementing each other's distinct vocal roles. "We don't step on each other's toes. We don't showboat. We don't try and beat each other."

"We knew we had a connection," says Ambrosius, "because we had the same type of passion to be the best at what we do, even if Nat was more toward the performance-poetry side and I was more into production and writing music."

So after a decade of friendship and a stab at college, the duo secured their new connection when Stewart put words to one of Ambrosius' melodic verses and they performed the piece at a poetry show. "We realized that it was special, so we wrote more," Stewart says. "We never had a process. We've never said, 'I'm going to go here. You go there.' It just is what it is. We don't try to take control of our art."

"We didn't even completely understand our songs when we made them [for Floetic]," Stewart adds. "Then we lived with them and grew with them." That growth is displayed on the group's new CD/DVD, Floacism "Live," which includes live versions of songs from Floetic plus three new studio cuts.

Tracks from a New Orleans show document Floetry's warm bond with its fans, many of whom sing along with the group's songs about love, broken relationships and self-awareness. "It's just about knowing thyself," co-writer Stewart says, "being able to say, 'Yeah, I've been through that situation' or 'I was a part of something like that' rather than just pointing fingers and passing judgment on other people."

"We're just trying to figure out our purpose in life," she says. "So we just talk about what we feel and think."

"My dad always said success is a journey, not a destination," Stewart says. "Marsha and I have been through a lot of stuff, from laughter to tears, from thought to silence, just lots of different things."

"This might not be the thing we're remembered for the most," she concludes about Floetry. "We might be remembered for a book that we write, or the score that Marsha does, or the children that we give birth to. We just enjoy the moment." iB

Where Do We Come From? What Are We? Where Are We Going? is part of the exhibition Gauguin Tahiti, at the MFA Feb. 29–June 20.

Island Post-Impressions

The MFA highlights Gauguin's tropical treasures

Just as Degas is synonymous with ballerinas, and Toulouse-Lautrec with cabaret scenes, their contemporary Paul Gauguin (1848-1903) brings images of Tahiti to mind. In the 1890s, the French artist left his family, famous artist friends and Paris to spend the better part of a decade plumbing the depths of human existence in the South Seas. While there, he produced some of his greatest post-impressionist paintings and sculpture. One hundred years after Gauguin's death, the Museum of Fine Arts commemorates the master's island sojourns with Gauguin Tahiti, opening Feb. 29. The exhibition—which makes its only U.S. appearance at the MFA—features more than 150 pieces, including paintings, carved wood sculpture, drawings, prints and illustrated manuscripts, from the artist's Polynesian period and the years that led up to it.

The highlight of the exhibition is Gauguin's masterpiece, the painting Where Do We Come From? What Are We? Where Are We Going?, which is reunited for the first time since 1898 with eight of the nine works it originally exhibited with in Paris. In the painting, three groups of figures—representing early life, young adulthood and the approach of death—illustrate the questions posed in its title. Other exhibition highlights include a Maori-inspired carved door frame that Gauguin designed for his own home, and Noa Noa, the illustrated manuscript Gauguin wrote to explain his work in Tahiti and the Marquesas to the Parisian audience. Feb. 29–June 20. Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-369-3392). www.mfa.org. MBTA: E Green Line to Museum. $22, $20 students and seniors, $7.50 children. —Jessica Iredale

O Canada

I've seen you on the train from Porter Square in the mornings. You're a cute brunette with your hair tucking out of your Canadian hat. Are you Canadian? You're in running clothes and I wonder where you have run from, or where you are running to. You have a backpack that says "Ironman" on it and you're heading out of Boston, like me. If you'd like to run out of the city away from it all, Ironwoman, e-mail me.

Plane Talk

I regret that I didn't talk with you more on our flight home from Atlanta on Jan 19. But we both slept for most of the flight. You were a Crimson grad returning from Cheersport in Georgia and heading back to the cozy confines of your Beacon Hill apartment. I was returning from visiting some friends down south. As we landed at Logan you pointed out a beautiful sunset on the other side of the plane. We never exchanged names, and I never had the chance to say goodbye. I am curious and excited to learn more about you! We slept next to each other and we don't even know each other's names! If you would like to meet up for a drink, I'd absolutely take you up on that offer. But if fate never brings us together again, I want you to know that I enjoyed the short conversations that we shared.

To the Raging Idiot at Fenway Bread and Circus

Today's Lesson: How not to get a date. Step #1: Don't make assumptions. You made your first mistake when you stalked me throughout the store. Then you chased me to my car assuming that I was single, that I was heterosexual, that I was "white" and lastly, that in this day and age a woman would accept an invitation to a date with a complete stranger. Step #2: Lose the chip on your shoulder. When a woman politely refuses your ridiculous proposition, it is not customary to then lash out at her by scurrying away and yelling that if you were white she would probably go out with you. In fact, if you tried to lose the Ted Bundy antics a woman would possibly be slightly more receptive to your stalking. The best part is when you played the race card, insinuating that I was racist and only refused your request for a date because you were nonwhite. Well, guess what? So am I. But that's beyond the real issue, which is that you judged me for only looking at your appearance when you asked me out with something like this: "I saw you in the store and I think you're really attractive, do you want to go see The Graduate with me on Saturday night?" Seems to me that you were the one judging me by my appearance, not the other way around. So enjoy The Graduate by yourself, as I'm sure your scare tactics are not going to score you a companion. Oh, and by the way, I hope you have front-row seats to see Lorraine Bracco in the buff because that is the closest your sorry ass is ever going to get to seeing a naked woman!

A Technicolor Thank You

I wore a chartreuse coat, white boots and a beehive. You were tall and thin, with curly, dark hair, and a long, tan trenchcoat. As I walked into the Garage in Harvard Square last Thursday afternoon, you said I looked amazingly beautiful—and I still glow with happiness. Thank you.
—Compliment Taken

Smitten by an Angel

Madison,
Twas by chance that we met,
For the gods did favor it.
Your Intelligence, Wit and Beauty
Did transfix me.
Yet Fate did intervene,
To cast its evil spell.
So for now it cannot be.
Yet should fate undo its evil spell,
I give you my word of honor,
Which you know I do not break,
That should the spark still linger
I would be your knight.

Good to the Last Drop

I met you at the Last Drop on Mass. Ave. a couple weekends ago. You were so beautiful and with a Southern accent to boot! We talked about everything from the Red Sox to music to the old TV show you're named after. I've never felt such a sincere connection with someone so immediately. Unfortunately, it was your friend's birthday and you were rushed out before I had a chance to get your number. I figure this is a good shot, since we talked about this magazine. If any of the hints haven't struck so far, here's another we talked about: My name and an old western movie. E-mail me and I'll take you out for the best dirty martini you've ever had, and be a perfect Southern gentleman.

Kuwaiti Girl with a British Accent

I was sitting next to you on the Green Line from Kenmore to Arlington, where I suggested you change to the E line to get to Northeastern. You recognized me (or maybe my brother) and we had a short conversation. I didn't feel like I had a chance to ask for your number, but I'd like to finish our conversation.

BullFinch

You work at the Cheers Bar on Beacon Hill. You are the tall blond bartender with the great sense of humor and thick Boston accent. I am a blond with deep blue eyes. I was wearing a tight blue quarter-sleeve shirt with black pants. Our eyes met the moment I walked in. I was in Boston for a conference. We talked about everything from sporting events to music. Although I live in New York, I am going to be back in Boston at the end of the month and would love to meet with you. Hopefully you remember my smile and deep dimples, as I cannot stop thinking about your sweet laugh, minty breath, tantalizing lips and strong arms. E-mail me and we can explore our minds or our bodies.

Hey, Naked Man

I saw you getting out of your car in your birthday suit on Fairfield Street at 11:30 pm the night after Christmas. Why were you nude?

Jaime from Lynn

We met at Jose McIntyre's in January. I was the tall guy who was a horrible dancer. You gave me your phone number, but my discount cell phone doesn't always save the numbers that I put in it. It isn't very often that a tall guy like myself meets such a cute, sweet, tall girl. I wish I could have called you. I hope I hear from you.

Finders Keepers. Losers Cheaters?

Ever abandon efforts to recover change that fell from your pocket into the land of couch seams and piggy banks? Bad move if you happened to stow away your wedding ring with your meter money. Although I have advised on the merits of the gym shower excuse, by now your story has been told. If she believed you, tell her I'm the plumber. She might not be a keeper, but the ring will be—unless you can respond with the engraving, which the rightful owner will know.

rockie horoscope

PISCES FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

You can set your own agenda if you align your intentions with the creative energy of the Pisces new moon. Consider Friday the 20th another birthday; along with your solar return, it serves as the beginning of another yearly cycle. As synchronicity would have it, this week you're also blessed with the beauty and goodness that Venus bestows on your artistic Neptune ruler. Without much hoopla, an opportunity to rise above the commonplace and attain one of your cherished ideals could appear out of nowhere.

ARIES
MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Dualistic Pisces is often a weird time for the forthright Ram because the subtleties of this emotional water sign can slip right past you. Although you don't have to be on guard, it couldn't hurt to keep an eye out for a colleague's erratic behavior or your employer's overblown expectations. However, with luscious Venus in your sign, you may be too busy with your social life to pay much attention to other people's oddities. Venus urges you to look your best, indulge all your senses and flirt like there's no tomorrow.

TAURUS
APRIL 20–MAY 20

Sense and sensibility: The cutting edge that comes from having Mars in your sign is excellent for incisive psychological analysis and social commentary. Also, because Martian energy isn't always available, now would be a good time for a nip/tuck procedure, dental surgery or body-building—unless you're patient enough to wait until August 2005 when Mars returns. Since the next transit of Taurus will take six months to complete, there'll be plenty of time to consider and reconsider your decision. Plan ahead or act on impulse?

GEMINI
MAY 21–JUNE 20

A memorable Gemini poetry fest takes place whenever your Mercury ruler is inundated with inspirational Neptunian vibrations. Oh, the imagery, the rhythms, the exaggerations! Knowing how susceptible to hyperbole you are right now, a cautious Twin would direct the "willingness to suspend disbelief," a classic definition of romanticism, toward a spiritual or religious end, not toward an unattainable love object. Channeling lyrics and creating visuals are other seemingly nontoxic undertakings, but go easy with the drugs and alcohol.

CANCER
JUNE 21–JULY 22

Try to get your taxes done while the Pisces sun is still in your house of joint finances, and while a rewarding aspect from unpredictable Uranus can send unexpected bucks your way. Once the new moon on the 20th revitalizes a fiscal situation that may have outgrown its usefulness, you can declare bankruptcy, apply for a loan or extend your credit line. You're currently in a good position to see things for what they are, as well as to recognize the potential for growth. Just stay clear of drama queens and hero worshippers.

LEO
JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Despite your desire to fix what is broken, to stick to your New Year's resolutions and spend quality time on yourself, your focus is being drawn to significant others and their problems. One of those relationships could take you by storm when your sun ruler meets idiosyncratic Uranus and radically changes the way things were. If there's time and energy left, try to forge ties with entrepreneurial folks on the Net. The good fortune that Jupiter in your Virgo money house promises to deliver should take root before May.

VIRGO
AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

If you're not heading out for a midwinter vacation, this would be a good time to buckle down and do what must be done, even the boring bits. While Virgos tend to be grounded in the specifics of a situation, during diffusive Pisces you can easily absorb the more abstract aspects. There's a reason why the spaced-out Fish is your cosmic complement, so while the sun and exploratory Uranus meet, you might discover the essence of compatibility. Apply these techniques to your daily routine and share them with your co-workers. You're a smooth operator.

LIBRA
SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

These are fun times for Libra social butterflies who have no expectations. Being willing to accept anything and anyone may make for interesting dinner conversation, but going with the flow could also bring you face-to-face with a good-looking person who inspires you to aim a bit higher. While your Venus ruler travels through spirited, sanguine Aries, the vision of you as warrior princess or prince won't seem so far-fetched. Stop negotiating for a peaceful solution, and instead, fight for what you truly want.

SCORPIO
OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Establishing a comfort zone with your folks or handling a messy household matter won't seem as daunting as it was during the holiday season if you can direct supportive Pisces new-moon energy toward those ends. As odd as it may sound, even a control-freakish Scorpio could be willing to try something new this week. Although this is the first winter that inventive Uranus is in Pisces, it is far from the last. Prepare to be impressed, maybe even shocked, by unexpected changes taking place throughout the various branches of your extended family tree.

SAGITTARIUS
NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Petty annoyances are to be expected while neighbors or siblings find or, since we're in imaginative Pisces, make up reasons to be upset with you. There's not much you can do except ignore or, if you're feeling forgiving, endure their complaints. This time of year the friction factor tends to increase due to the planets passing through pity-me Pisces. It might get worse—in early March when the sun opposes your expansive Jupiter ruler—before it gets better. Until then, redefine your fine romance. Commitment?

CAPRICORN
DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

More about the money: Although Capricorns are customarily too thorough about financial matters to be deceived, there are enough "What if?" concerns in your money sector right now to ask, "What's up?" Since disruptive Uranus is also lurking in that area, something totally unexpected might happen to shake your confidence. So double-check all transactions for another week and play it even safer than usual. Also, table your desire to transform your pad into a palace until you have a clearer vision.

AQUARIUS
JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Read for Gemini. You too could be swept away by the sheer poetry of what's happening, i.e., silver-tongued Mercury and visionary Neptune meeting in your sign. Or, more likely, what might happen when the sun and your Uranus ruler collide on the 21st. If you want to break free of a situation or a relationship, this would be the appropriate time to run for the hills. Or to instigate a rebellion, especially if you're under pressure to follow rules and regulations you don't agree with. Are we talking about social etiquette, sexual politics or the NCAA?

it's a SHORE thing

The Improper Bostonian's Shores of Boston issue is sure to please. We will take a look at perfect day trips to Boston's North and South shores and tell you what to do, where to eat, shop and hang out when you get there. Did you ever wonder how the shores compare? Consult our handy-dandy chart on who's got the most celebrities, the best beaches and the tastiest seafood. Speaking of seafood, in 1916, Lawrence Woodman dipped a shucked clam in batter and threw it into the deep fryer, creating the first fried clam. In this issue, Julie Suratt visits Woodman's restaurant on the North Shore and highlights it as the quintessential New England clam shack. Then she returns to Boston and compares the decor, food and view at Woodman's with that of six seafood shanties in Boston. Finally if you like your fried clams with a side of salsa, you will enjoy the Improper's guide to dance classes in Boston—you'll find out where to learn everything from the cha-cha to the tango.

stars of varying wattage who assembled in the ballroom of the Charles Hotel—a turnout that included Fox's wife, Tracy Pollan; Dorchester homies gone Hollywood Donnie Wahlberg—with his stunning wife, Kim Fey—and Neal McDonough (the bad guy in the upcoming remake of Walking Tall), with his gorgeous glamazon of a bride, Ruvé; outrageous magicians Penn and Teller; funnyman Lenny Clarke and his wife, champion charter-boat captain and singer/songwriter Jennifer; TV stars Robert David Hall (of CSI) and Ken Howard (of The White Shadow), who brought his bewitching other half, Linda; film director Sam Weisman; J. Geils frontman Peter Wolf; and such notable locals as presidential pal Dick Friedman and the magnificent Nancy; celebrity chef Jody Adams; gambling bigwig Gary Loveman (CEO of Harrah's); real estate moguls Peter and Paul Palandjian with their respective wives Minou and Dionne; retired SJC judge Maria Lopez; liquor titan Harvey Allen and his current squeeze, former radio shock jock Carolyn Fox; Tudor Investments titan Jim Pallotta; uber-jeweler Amit Handa of Alpha Omega; improbably tall couple Mike and Betsy Danziger; limo giant Scott Solombrino; absurdly attractive pair Sean and Natasha Clarke, and so on and so forth down the proverbial A-list.

Cocktails and hors d'oeuvres were followed by a live auction of fantasy items and a feast fit for Elvis. After that came a few hours of gambling (with the celebrities serving as dealers), and a performance by Penn and Teller, who did a mini version of their Vegas act. By that point, everyone was hungry again and breakfast was served, after which exhaustion took over and it was time to head upstairs to bed.

"They thought of everything," said one woman, grabbing a pair of the terry cloth bathrobes that were given out as party favors.

"Not really," said her husband. "I could use a fistful of Advil."

AGAINST ALL ODDS...

For an evening that easily could have degenerated into a celebrity petting zoo, it was a wildly entertaining affair when former Bruins great Cam Neely teamed up with actor Michael J. Fox and comedian Denis Leary to host Betting on a Cause and a Cure, a big-ticket Vegas-style casino night to benefit the charitable foundations headed by each.

Like staring up at the night sky, it was impossible to count the noted painter John Gentile, performances by BLO singers, and buffets groaning under the weight of delicious delicacies from some of the North End's finest kitchens, including Prezza, Sage and Lucca.

Attendees, meanwhile, included the likes of Wang Center CEO Joe Spaulding; big-time BLO supporters Linda Cabot Black, Hod and Cassandra Irvine, Suki and Miguel de Braganza, Nancy Sonna-bend, Peter Wender, Lee Day Gillespie and Lee Perry (flying solo, because his wife, Cokie, was on an all-women ski trip to Steamboat Springs); bow-tied arts booster Bill Nigreen; the dashing and debonair Dietrich Falkenthal; power broker Larry Dicara; the effervescent Anne Fitzpatrick Cucchiaro; valet mogul Andrew Tuchler and his babe-a-licious wife, Christine; Putnam Investments poobah Gordon Silver; New Hampshire's honorary French consul Adele Baker; and others too numerous to mention.

Overheard in line for the bar: "My publicist called me the other day and said, 'I need a few quotes on viscosity for Cosmo.'"

But thankfully, the topic changed before anyone could ask, "The viscosity of what?" IB

FROM THE EDITOR

ONE FOR THE MEN

Guys, you've stuck with us through our past two issues—devoted to weddings and spring fashion, respectively—and here's your reward: our first-ever Man Issue. Persuaded by staff writer Ezra Dyer that a guy-focused IMPROPER was only fair given the four issues per year that we devote to fashion and beauty, we've filled these pages with stories of particular interest to XY chromosomers.

Ever wish you could sit down with a group of women and get straight answers to eternal questions like "What do women consider deal-breakers on a first date?" and "What's a non-meathead way to drive away a guy who's hitting on your girlfriend?" We had men tell us the questions they most wanted to ask, and then we polled females for the answers—essential reading for both sexes (page 20).

In this issue you'll also find Mayor Menino and other prominent Boston males modeling sleek suits (page 32), one man's anxiety-fraught tale of moving in with his girlfriend (page 24), plus two pages of the latest gadgets—from a gas-powered blender to a canine translator (page 26).

Don't say we never did nothin' for you, fellas.

FASHION BASHIN'

I just returned from the Sports Club/LA and saw 60-year-old women in their '80s jumpsuits looking more fashionable than the cover and pages of your latest issue (Spring Fashion Preview, Feb. 18). The cover with those earrings and that necklace? Pick one or the other, not both. But what made these outfits outrageously bad, besides the ill-chosen shoes, the mediocre jewelry and the uninteresting photographs, is the lack of creativity.

Please, I beg of you, get rid of the white background photo shoots. Show some lifestyle shots. We live in a great city—show it off now and then. The canned shots of these models are enough to make my soy latte curdle. And makeup product shots in which you can actually see the makeup would be appreciated.

Now that Sex and the City has ended, women need some inspiration, some direction, some attitude. Where is the female voice of the city? Where is the hip single girl's voice? The hip married girl's voice? Is the IMPROPER a Zagat guide or a more encompassing guide to the city and the people who live in it?

—LARISSA MILLS

HE'S A MAD MAN

The Spring Fashion issue showed what women should be looking for as the weather warms up. But only one page devoted to the guys?! I guess the editors of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN don't believe we like to see the latest spring fashion, too. We deserve more than just a token page of five pictures. I take it the term "metrosexual" hasn't made its way to the staff of the IMPROPER as of yet.

PRICE GOWNGING?

The editors failed to fact-check "Battle of the Brides" in the IMPROPER's Bridal Issue (Feb. 4) when they reported that all dresses at the Filene's Basement Bridal Gown sale cost $249. On the morning of Feb. 20, after waiting in line for two hours, I was surprised to find that all dresses were not, in fact, $249. Many dresses were actually $499 and $699. As a loyal reader, I have always relied on the details you report in your magazine's articles and stories. In the future, please fact-check details prior to publication.

—DARCY HEITZKE
Brookline

Editor's response: When writer Julie Suratt attended the Filene's Basement sale in 2003, all dresses were $249. We fact-checked the article against the company's Web site, which noted that all dresses were again $249.

CORRECTION

In the Feb. 18 dining column, we listed the wrong phone number for Anthem. The correct number is 617-523-8383.

THAT'S LA MORRA

Banish any lingering memories of Fajitas & 'Ritas when you head to La Morra in Brookline Village. The only thing the two restaurants have in common is their location. Chef/owner Josh Ziskin, previously of the acclaimed Tuscan Grill in Waltham, has turned the former Tex-Mex joint into a warm and inviting Italian restaurant.

Step inside, and you'll feel miles away from Route 9 traffic that zooms by this spot a couple of blocks from the Village. It's worth the trip. Exposed brick walls, hardwood floors and soft lighting greet visitors on both floors. Every seat was filled on a Monday night, as eager diners parked themselves at the small wine bar on the first floor to wait for upstairs tables to clear.

Waiters carry wooden bowls brimming with slices of fresh bread to each table. Instead of olive oil, they serve a delectable ricotta cheese spread into which we dipped chunks of bread—too eagerly, we realized, as the waiter handed us menus listing multiple courses: cicchetti (Venetian-style tapas), antipasti, primi and secondi. We started with two small dishes from the cicchetti menu, salt cod with garlic and lemon ($3.50) and fried olives ($3), both wonderful lead-ins to squash flan with Parmesan fonduta ($8.75), roasted chicken cooked under a brick ($17.95), and red wine– and cumin-braised calamari with spinach ($16.95)—washed down with a glass of chianti, reasonably priced at $6.

Ziskin's menu focuses on Northern Italian cuisine: fresh pastas, and braised and wood-grilled meats. With the large selection of Italian wines and the decor—rustic wooden tables, sage-green glazed terracotta plates and bowls, and antique light fixtures—you might as well be dining in the Tuscan countryside. One piece of advice: Don't save room for dessert, but eat it anyway. 48 Boylston St., Brookline (617-739-0007). www.lamorra.com. —Erin Hagedorn and Julie Suratt

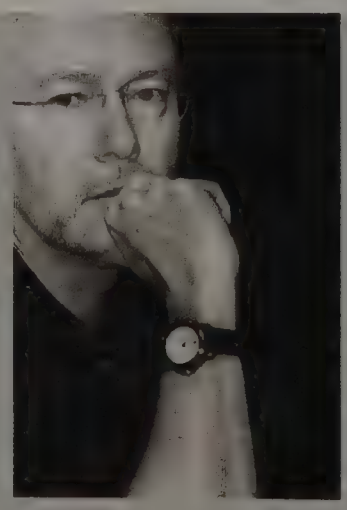
JOCK TALK



Sports Radio 850 is run by a chick!

There's a new boss in town at WEEI 850 AM, and general manager Julie Kahn isn't fazed by the fact that her station's audience is meatier than a rack of ribs at a tailgate party. (WEEI is the number one radio station in Boston among men ages 25-54.) Male listeners need not worry that on-air discussion will suddenly veer toward topics like the final episode of Sex and the City, as Kahn has no plans to pursue the fairer demographic. "We love our women listeners, but we don't program with them in mind," she says. So what kind of show would she like to see on WEEI, if she could hire any host? "What if we had Bob Kraft do his own show, where we search out the next great sports team executive under his mentorship? We could call it the Sports Apprentice," she says. Kahn is a sports fan herself, and it's probably to WEEI's benefit that she keeps a level head on sports matters—unlike many of the station's listeners. In fact, she might be one of the only people in New England who still has faith in Danny Ainge's long-term plans for the Celtics. "I'm sure he has a plan," Kahn says. "I think you have to give any new manager time. I'm banking on that." —Ezra Dyer

inner view

THE GAMBLER

As far as James McManus is concerned, Kenny Rogers ain't just whistlin' Dixie. McManus, a Chicago-based author, experienced holdin' and foldin' with the big dogs firsthand when Harper's magazine sent him to cover the 2000 World Series of Poker in Las Vegas. A well-seasoned if not professional poker player, he bet his $4,000 advance to win a seat in the tournament. During many grueling rounds of No-Limit Texas Hold 'Em, he ponied up thousands and lost at least one seven-digit pot. In the end, however, the amateur placed fifth overall, took home about $250,000 in winnings, and got enough material to turn his Harper's article into the best-selling book Positively Fifth Street. We caught up with the author before his national book tour lands him at Newtonville Books for a reading March 3.

IB: What are your favorite places to gamble on the East Coast ?

JM: Definitely Foxwoods, the Taj, the new Borgata in Atlantic City. There's a couple of smaller private games in New York City. I can't divulge their location, but lower Manhattan has a couple of good poker games involving actors and media people. Those are the places that hold big No-Limit Hold 'Em games. Everyone puts up $10,000, and the total prize pool is $3 or $4 million.

IB: Which celebrities could you imagine would be really good poker players, and why?

JM: Well, Ben Affleck is a real player. He got really bad cards in Celebrity Poker. He got lot of negative publicity for his relationship with Jennifer Lopez, but it is a definite fact that his dedication to poker was a factor in their breakup. Lou Diamond Phillips is a great player, and Jerry Buss, who owns the LA Lakers.

IB: In a poker match between George W. Bush and Anna Nicole Smith, who would win?

JM: Despite the fact that Texas Hold 'Em was invented in Bush's home state, I don't think any serious poker is played in the White House, so I would bet on Anna Nicole.

IB: Are certain casinos better than others for poker?

JM: Without question. Fairly recently, poker was not offered at the vast majority of casinos. Since its popularization on TV, more casinos have been offering it. Along with Vegas, Southern California is the capital of poker in America.

IB: Do poker skills help you in real life?

JM: The ability to read faces and body languages to pick up signals about who is telling the truth and who's not is certainly a skill that's useful at the table and in the rest of life.

IB: What's the most you've lost or seen anyone lose in a game?

JM: In my book, I lose a $1.1 million pot and win a $896,000 pot. When I lose the million dollar pot, it's recorded on the Discovery Channel. People who play poker know that losing with the best hand feels like being shot in the scrotum with a pellet gun, and the videotape captures my expression.

IB: What's the best advice you can give a first-time poker player in Vegas?

JM: Fold.

B-BALL & LOBSTER

Good Work... Working for Jasper White doesn't sound so bad. The seafood sultan recently overhauled the former smoking section of his Cambridge Summer Shack and turned it into Frankie's Sports Bar, in honor of his prize bartender, Frank Reardon. Reardon says that after the smoking ban went into effect, that portion of the restaurant didn't see much traffic. Throughout January, White and his barkeep revamped the section, which now includes a 60-seat bar and five TVs. The sports bar debuted in mid February, serving a full Summer Shack menu, and is open daily until midnight. Reardon seems more than enthusiastic about the change. "Where else can you watch a basketball game, listen to the Sex Pistols and have Jasper's pan-roasted lobster?"

Attention Chocoholics... Chocolate and beer are two of life's simple pleasures, and thanks to Sam Adams they can be enjoyed together, one sip at a time. Sam Adams recently introduced a Chocolate Bock. The dark, malty beer infused with Scharffen Berger chocolate and a hint of vanilla flavor rolled out in February. If you haven't stocked up yet, better hurry. The limited edition batch (only 50,000 bottles) is available at Sunset Cantina on Comm. Ave.

State of the Union... In the running for Union Square's fave neighborhood café is the recently inaugurated Sherman. Husband-and-wife duo Ben Dryer and Karyn Coughlin opened the Somerville eatery—named after both the legendary Civil War general and Dryer's grandfather, a presidential speechwriter and Peabody Award winner—in mid January. The former Toscanini's ice cream employees stock coffee, organic teas, baked goods, sandwiches (pressed gruyére, caramelized onions, spinach and dijon, and pancetta, lettuce and tomato are popular) and, of course, select Toscanini flavors. Breakfast, lunch and dinner are served daily, and Coughlin hopes to screen underground films and sell independently published books in the near future. 257 Washington St., Somerville (617-776-4944).

Sherman café in Somerville's Union Square

Southie Asian... Filling the high-quality/inexpensive Asian food void in South Boston is the Teriyaki House. The Chinese/Japanese kitchen opened last November, and while owner Jennifer Lai cites teriyaki as the specialty, it serves everything from lo mein and tempura to sushi and bubble tea. Prices can accommodate even the smallest budget, and lunch and dinner are served daily until midnight. 32 West Broadway, South Boston (617 269-2000).

SUITED UP

It's been more than seven years since Boston native Sean Cassidy (not to be confused with Hardy Boys teen dream Shaun Cassidy) took off for New York to launch his boutique, Sean. Now he's back, offering a little friendly competition to Thomas Pink and Aquascutum with the opening of his boutique on Newbury Street. Parisian designer Emile Lafaurie's menswear is the featured collection. Cassidy fell head over heels for Lafaurie's Italian-made suits and colorful accents during a shopping excursion in Paris in fact, he was so moved by Lafaurie's sartorial know-how, he decided to ditch his successful publishing career to retail the Parisian designs stateside. Six stores later, Sean is now the only Lafaurie vendor in America. Styles range from lightweight wool, linen and cotton suits to painter coats and V-neck sweaters, and believe it or not, they won't break the bank (a typical suit costs $350-$450). My favorite is the poplin shirt that comes in a choice of 24 colors. 154 Newbury St., Boston (617-399-3993). —Samantha House

Irish Style... Brighton pub the Irish Village recently made the transition from dive to designer thanks to a facelift courtesy of interior-style guru Peter Niemitz. Perfect pulls of Guinness and an abundance of Irish expats are still the norm, but the beat-up furnishings are history. Niemitz's redesign includes a private lounge area sequestered by a velvet curtain, gold-studded black leather banquettes and all new bathrooms.

Like Minds... Ivy Leaguers and their straight-A brethren have yet another online dating service designed to channel the "smart" genes into one pool. Like Right StuffDating.com and GoodGenes.com, SquareDating—an off-shoot of an Ivy and Ivy-wannabe alumni-networking site called The Square.com—aims to unite students and alums from select schools. Company CEO Nicholas Ascheim, a Cornell and Harvard Business alum, and his cronies launched the matchmaking service in December. Members can create profiles and search others' for free. Subscription ($25 per month) is required only when you find someone you want to contact. Harvard, MIT and Tufts all made the list, natch, but surprisingly, Ascheim reports that Boston ranks third (behind New York and L.A.) in Square membership. Nerd alert. www.squaredating.com.

Strike Three... Making its way East is trendy Hollywood bowling alley Lucky Strike Lanes. The nightlife impresarios at Jillian's are launching the third Strike on the third floor of the Ipswich Street entertainment emporium on April 9. Co-owner Kevin Troy reports that the 16-lane alley will have lofted 20-foot ceilings, several 10-by-14-foot HDTVs, and video screens (showing their own arty videos) above each lane. With ten-pin bowling, a full menu and bar, and a lounge area, Lucky Strike will be ready to give Kings a run for its money. 145 Ipswich St., Boston (617-437-0300).

Book It... Used book stores have seen better days. So we have to commend the courageous efforts of the bookworms at the new Inman Square literary purveyor Lorem Ipsum (the name comes from dummy text used by printers and typesetters). Anxiety-Free Tattooing... Go ahead, get your current flame's name tattooed across your backside. Tattooers' remorse is a worry of the past now that Newton's Angelbare salon has introduced temporary ink. Don't worry, it's not anywhere near as lame as the tattoos you find in a Cracker Jack box (it better not be for $200). The procedure looks—and feels—just like a permanent tattoo (Angelbare uses real needles), but your body art can be erased in five minutes with a chemical solution. Or it will last up to five years if you leave it alone. Fleeting Moments... July can't come soon enough. But when it does, hordes of Bostonians will be hopping boats to the Vineyard. The MV Vineyard Sound, complete with full bar, makes the trip to Oak Bluffs in less than an hour (as opposed to the usual hour and a half). Tickets are $20 one way, and while you can't bring your car on board, you can park it in the lot right across the street. (866-453-6800). www.nefastferry.com.

The Museum of Fine Arts hosted the event of the season with the opening of Gauguin Tahiti on Feb. 23. More than 700 art enthusiasts attended this internationally acclaimed exhibition, which was visited by more than half a million people in Paris. It contains more than 125 of Gauguin's brilliant Tahitian works gathered from around the globe, including the monumental painting from the MFA collection, Where Do We Come From? What Are We? Where Are We Going? as well as objects from the South Seas that inspired the artist. The evening featured a reception with lively Tahitian-inspired music and decor, including tiki bars and palm trees.

CLASSY ACTIONS

The jury's out on whether or not I'm still a Mainer

Once upon a time I contemplated becoming a lawyer. I could see myself wearing a suit and arguing that those Hudson River fish died of old age in General Electric v. A Bunch of Losers Who Think Rivers Shouldn't Be Flammable—oh yeah, I'd be corporate, baby. Unfortunately, I'm not much for remembering legal stuff. I think the term "pro bono" has something to do with Ron Jeremy, the Socratic Method is an electronica band and torts are delicious. But right now, I'd like to revisit my legal-eagle alter ego because I feel the need to defend myself against a litany of slanderous accusations leveled at me by my "friends," per se, mea culpa, uma thurma turbo. Here then, I give you the alleged charge against which I, the alleged defendant, allegedly plead innocent.

Doyle, Wilson et al v. Ez. This case was brought after the defendant, Mr. Dyer, failed to bring his snowmobile on a trip to the Adirondacks. The plaintiffs, Messrs. Doyle and Wilson, also allege that the defendant got a lobster-related Trivial Pursuit question wrong and recently paid more than $100 for a pair of jeans. Therefore his Mainer card should be revoked until further notice.

Your honor, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, good morning. I'd like to draw your attention to Exhibit A, my right hand. You'll notice a scar across the top of my middle knuckle. See that? Pretty bad, isn't it? Don't worry, it's fine—it hurts a bit when I'm ladling soup down at the shelter or giving massages at the old folks' home, but I'll be alright. I'll bet you wonder how I got that scar. Fancy Boston fella like myself, I probably cut myself on a martini glass, right? Or maybe I spilled some merlot on my khakis and got so mad that I punched my IKEA occasional table? Wrong. That scar is from a sled—I'm sorry, a "snowmobile." We Mainers call them sleds.

A few years ago my hand slipped on a spark plug wrench and I bashed my knuckles into my 1977 Scorpion Sting's cylinder head. But that's not the only trouble my sled's caused. One time my mother was helping me push it back into the barn after a big storm, and she slipped and her foot got stuck in the track. I had to take her to the emergency room, ayuh. That's the truth, even though having to take your mother to the ER with a snowmobile injury sounds like the punchline to a Jeff Foxworthy joke. My point is that snowmobiles are dangerous, diabolical machines and I'm never riding one again until I can afford something a bit safer, like a 2004 Arctic Cat ZR 900 EFI Sno Pro with hand-warmers and a studded track.

On the topic of Trivial Pursuit, the questionable question was, "How many legs does a lobster have?" Being a former lobsterman, I said eight. Trivial Pursuit said the answer was 10. Now take a look at Exhibit B, the Maine license plate that once adorned my Camaro IROC-Z. Please note that when you read between the ones on either end, the plate reads 3MTA3, or, in your rear-view mirror, "eat me"—which is appropriate, because also on this plate is a tasty eight-legged lobster. So the Trivial Pursuit people count the claws as legs. Does that make sense? Members of the jury, if I asked you how many legs you have, would you say four? Would you put on a pair of gloves and walk to the dentist on your hands? Well, neither would a lobster. That'd be silly—lobsters don't even have teeth. I am right, and Trivial Pursuit, which is written by a bunch of yuppie flatlanders who wouldn't know a lobster if one walked in the door, jumped in a pot of boiling water and served itself with a side of corn, are wrong.

HAVING TO TAKE YOUR MOTHER TO THE ER WITH A SNOWMOBILE INJURY SOUNDS LIKE THE PUNCHLINE TO A JEFF FOXWORTHY JOKE

Finally, let's get into my pants. I do not dispute the fact that I bought a pair of jeans at French Connection for $108. But is that so wrong? I mean, they're boot-cuts, so I could wear them fishing or hunting, although I'd be pretty upset if I spilled bait juice on them or got mud on the cuffs. But they're perfect for when I'm going out to a lounge that's chic yet casual—you know, the kind of place where the calamari comes with something more imaginative than marinara sauce, like maybe a passion fruit chutney.

What?! My Mainer card has been suspended? Whatever. It's not like you can get a decent latte up there anyway. iB

MALCOLM ROGERS

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

This year marks Malcolm Rogers' 10th anniversary as the Ann and Graham Gund Director of the Museum of Fine Arts. Born and raised in England, Rogers was educated at Oxford, receiving a B.A. in English language and literature and a Ph.D. in art history. A noted authority on 16th-, 17th- and early 18th-century portraits, he has published extensively on the topic. Prior to coming to the MFA, he served as deputy director and deputy keeper of the National Portrait Gallery in London. Highlights of his sometimes controversial tenure at the MFA have included reorganizing the curatorial departments, reopening the Huntington Avenue entrance, abolishing admission fees for children under 17, extending viewing hours and overseeing an expansion plan, which includes a new wing designed by the noted architect Sir Norman Foster. Under Rogers' guidance, the museum has mounted major exhibitions by such artists as Rembrandt, Monet, van Gogh and John Singer Sargent, as well as less conventional shows like Herb Ritts: Work; Dangerous Curves: Art of the Guitar; and Crowning Glories: Two Centuries of Tiaras. At press time, the MFA was preparing for the blockbuster exhibition Gauguin Tahiti, scheduled to open Feb. 29 in its only American appearance. Last December, Rogers was named a Commander of the Order of the British Empire by Queen Elizabeth. He lives in Boston.

Jonathan Soroff: So should we be calling you Sir Malcolm these days?

Malcolm Rogers: No. Malcolm will do just fine. But as for the CBE, I was frankly taken very much by surprise. I'm honored, being respectful of traditional institutions, and I'm very pleased that it recognizes my services to the arts on both sides of the Atlantic.

JS: Give me a one-sentence definition of art.

MR: Art is human creativity raised to its highest level.

JS: Is art dictated by fashion?

MR: Fashionable art is dictated by fashion, yes, but one of the things that gives art its mystery is the sorting out that time does. The bulk of contemporary art, whether it's music or painting, time will erase. We try to guess the effects of time, but all the evidence would suggest that, most of the time, we get it wrong.

JS: Wouldn't that mean that museums should avoid acquiring contemporary art?

MR: No. We pursue a very active policy of acquiring contemporary art, but generally we're trying to buy established artists whose work suggests that they will form part of the canon.

JS: Would that include an artist like Damien Hirst, who simply puts shark heads in formaldehyde?

MR: As it happens, we don't have any of his work, but the kind of artists in the contemporary field I think we should be collecting are those who are either inspiring the students at the school or against whom the students are rebelling.

JS: Where should the MFA be ranked compared with the Louvre or the Met?

MR: Very high indeed. This is one of the greatest museums in the world, but I think it's still a somewhat undiscovered treasure, under the shadow of the Met. Then again, Boston, in general, is a city that doesn't feel the need to market itself very aggressively.

JS: What's the most underrated collection in the museum—the ancient pots and pans, those pornographic Greek vases?

MR: [Laughs.] Although I shouldn't have any, my favorites are the real underdogs. The textiles, for instance, I love. And the silver collection. I also have a real soft spot for musical instruments, where design is wonderfully wed to craftsmanship and form. In museums, there's still this old hierarchy that exists—painting is the greatest art, and it's downhill from there—whereas I personally think a great deal of the decorative arts and applied arts.

JS: OK, the museum's burning and you can save only one thing. What would it be and why?

MR: Oh, I suppose, if I were truthful, I'd be tempted to save Sargent's portrait of the Boit daughters. It gives visitors so much delight, and it's so very Boston.

ONE OF THE THINGS THAT GIVES ART ITS MYSTERY IS THE SORTING OUT THAT TIME DOES. THE BULK OF CONTEMPORARY ART, WHETHER IT'S MUSIC OR PAINTING, TIME WILL ERASE

JS: Does the MFA make money?

MR: I inherited a deficit in my first year, but since then, we've had a succession of modest surpluses. We're not a business, and each year is a struggle. This museum is probably the world's largest privately funded museum. Unlike, say, the Met, we get no money from the city. Less than half of one percent of our income comes from public sources. So everyone who invests in us is essentially asking that we spend those resources sensibly and in a way that reflects their interests. That's what I try to do.

JS: So money determines everything?

MR: Well, I've yet to find an arts organization that has more money than it needs.

JS: What's your response to the art snobs who pooh-poohed the exhibits of Herb Ritts' photos or Ralph Lauren's car collection?

MR: Herb Ritts, I really believe, is a master of black-and-white photography. I think he ran afoul of the art establishment because he's commercial and successful and popular. A 19th-century equivalent might've been mounting a show of Winslow Homer's woodcut illustrations for magazines, and I doubt very much that anyone today would object to that. The museum world is full of strange orthodoxies. I could mount a show that included the chair you're sitting on, and no one would blink, but somehow objects that belong to a famous person are not worthy? Ralph Lauren's cars are beautiful, and we intend to display them as the sculptural forms they are. What worries me is how narrow-minded those people are who try to fence museums into very limited parameters.

JS: What one thing in the MFA's collection do you consider butt-ugly?

MR: [Laughs.] Nothing immediately leaps to mind.

JS: Oh, come on. There must be something that leaves you cold, even if you don't exactly recoil in disgust.

MR: Well, I'll admit that there a few early Egyptian pots on display that I could do without. Some of the archaeological material is a little tedious, to tell the truth.

JS: If you could steal one thing from the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, what would it be?

MR: The great Titian [The Rape of Europa].

JS: Any artistic guilty pleasures—velvet Elvis paintings, or pictures of dogs playing poker?

MR: Not really. I'm very much a traditionalist. But I think a lot of things have artistic merit that might surprise some people. For instance, I think Norman Rockwell was one of the great illustrators of all time. I'm shocked that people are sort of worried about whether he's serious. There's a real anxiety in America about being taken seriously, which means that people don't just enjoy.

JS: During your tenure, there have been some major personnel changes. Do you think you're well-liked at the museum, and do you care?

MR: Everyone wants to be liked, but in truth, you can't run a major organization with that being a big factor. You have to do what's right for the institution. You have to make decisions with the understanding that you won't necessarily be liked for what you do. That's part of leadership.

JS: Last question: In one sentence, what function should a museum fulfill in society?

MR: To bring art and people together. IB

FEMALES ANSWER QUESTIONS

We've asked women for the inside information on everything men need to know but were too busy watching football to ask.

BY EZRA DYER

There are two basic situations where a guy would rather put his pinkie in a cigar-cutter than ask a question: when he's confused about which brand of tampon is on the shopping list, and when female behavior is involved. While we can't help you figure out whether that scrawl says "Playtex" or "Tampax," we have asked a panel of women to demystify some of the enigmas that have long befuddled men. Below are women's answers to actual questions from actual guys: What are the no-nos on a first date? What are the early warning signs that a woman is insane? And what's this "foreplay" stuff, anyway? Read on, learn how to enrich your life and your relationship, then get back to the serious business of picking your bracket for the Sweet Sixteen.

What's a deal-breaker on a first date?

"The biggest deal-breaker for me is a guy who is too smitten on the first date. There's nothing more alarming than when a guy is ready to hand himself over to you after knowing you for two hours. In no order, other peeves are getting sloppy drunk, being a teetotaler, treating me like I'm dumb, not liking puppies, and talking about other women." —Ann, 26

"Answering your phone. It shouldn't even be on." —Kate, 24

"Not opening our car door. Sorry, it's a telltale sign that you just don't get it." —Wendy, 33

"Not phoning if you'll be more than 10 minutes late. Reciting your entire resume and not asking about me. Not paying, especially when you did the inviting."—Leah, 23

"Talking about themselves incessantly. Being pretentious. Using too much hair gel. Smoking." —Kat, 35

"What I'll call 'lateness denial.' For example, on a date that is supposed to start at 8 pm, the guy calls at 8:25 to say that he's just leaving his house and is going to be 'about 10 minutes late.'" —Susie, 42

"Bringing another person with you (like a girl)." —Alex, 34

"If you are cheap. You most certainly are not expected to pay for everything. But if you talk about money, if you complain about prices, and if you don't offer to pick up the bill on the first date that you ask me out on, you can forget the date even happened." —Carol, 25

"If he: shows up late, doesn't hold the door, talks about himself the whole time, talks about an ex the whole time, still lives at home, talks about his family too much, doesn't have any goals or a job, acts really nervous, doesn't look me in the eye, drinks too much so he's slurring, doesn't sound educated or didn't go to college, talks about his parents' divorce that happened when he was 5, has no depth—mentally or culturally, and doesn't like to travel. Hmm, I swear I'm not that picky." —Caroline, 25

What's the best way to drive away a guy who's hitting on your girlfriend without seeming like a total meathead?

"Play it cool; don't act like you're threatened. Hopefully, you can interject some sort of joke. That way, you'll dazzle your dame with self-confidence and wit." —Rachel, 37

"Just introduce yourself with a big, fat, shit-eating grin because you're going home with her and he's not." —Anne, 28

"This is your chance to be manly and assert your territory, because every girl likes to be taken care of to a degree. If done in a tasteful and nonaggressive way, it can be very endearing. Curtailing a situation by slipping an arm around her waist gets the message across subtly." —Leah, 23

"Start hitting on a girl nearby. Your girlfriend will walk away from the guy and you won't have to do anything." —Katie, 25

"You don't do anything. You wait and see what she does. If she politely brushes him off, then you're OK. If she tells him off, and he's a jerk about it, get ready to defend your lady's honor. But if she flirts back, then you're in real trouble." —Kate, 24

"Go up to your girl and be sweet and nice. It sends a message: 'This person has a loving lover, so don't bother.' Jealousy is unattractive in most cases. It makes you look insecure. Ride on the idea that your lover can flirt and be flirted with, knowing that they can't wait to be in your loving, wonderful, exciting arms." —Laurel, 29

"There is no good way. Guys will always look like meatheads when defending their women." —Miti, 25

Are there any telltale signs that a woman is going to be insane? What are the clues that let you know to run before her head starts spinning and she vomits pea soup?

"If you are unable to meet her family (craziness is hereditary), listen for comments such as, 'Have I shown you my collection of toilet-paper origami swans?'" —Kat, 35

"Changing all her plans to be with you—watch out for girls who dump their friends for you." —Anne, 28

"If she text-messages, e-mails or calls you late at night, watch out. You may have a psycho on your hands." —Heather, 24

"Premature nicknames. If a woman starts using a short or long name too early. She's trying to create intimacy or demonstrate control right out of the gate. If she uses the full name, she's husband-hunting." —Tina, 33

"Pay attention to little things—talking in future tense on the first date and saying 'you'll find I'm very...' is a pretty good indicator. It means in their mind they are already picking out the wedding cake." —Caroline, 25

"I'd estimate that 75 percent of all women are insane on some level while remaining fully functional, and the smartest ones will hide it until month six. Every good girl knows to keep her insanity filter on full throttle till that time." —Jess, 26

We all love a girl who enjoys some cocktails, but being a flat-out lush is a turnoff. What number of drinks per week pushes a girl from fun-loving partyer to alcoholic?

"As long as ladylike behavior dominates and she knows her limits, one night of going too far should be excused. Several and you've got a problem with a 12-step solution." —Leah, 23

"I know that when I am drinking three or four beer or wine drinks, that's a lot better for my social standing than if I have three or four martinis. They say martinis are like breasts: One is too few, three are too many, two are perfect." —Katie, 25

"Drinking on Sunday through Wednesday nights—'school nights,' per se—unless there's something special going on." —Caroline, 25

"If she can drink you under the table, get out." —Heather, 24

"Run if you meet a bed-wetter." —Tina, 33

"Ten to 12 seems reasonable for someone who is socially active." —Wendy, 33

"It's not the number of drinks; it's the telltale shameless flirting/groping with bartenders by night's end, or showcasing surprising belligerence and sailor-type vocabulary without logical provocation." —Jess, 26

"Jesus, somebody tell me. I'm probably toeing the line. In NYC it's like 15, in Boston it's probably like two." —Sarah, 25

Where did women meet the boyfriends who ended up becoming their most successful relationships (past or current)?

"College." —Kate, 24

"My current boyfriend and I met at a bar, which I know they say is a bad thing. But we have been together for 2½ years, so "they" are wrong." —Carol, 25

"Through friends, but not too close friends, where the person in the middle will have to choose sides if the relationship falters. Most success comes from meeting friends of friends who only know each other well enough to provide a basic background check." —Leah, 23

"Every man I've ever had a relationship with (with one exception) I've met through work in some way." —Alex, 34

"Sad to say, my most 'successful' boyfriends I've met in bars." —Rachel, 37

"I don't think it really matters where you meet someone; it's more how you meet someone. My most successful relationships (believe it or not) have been when I have gone up to a man myself—either at a bar, party or other social event. No one likes a guy who's trying to be smooth in a bar." —Caroline, 25

"At Friendly's, over strawberry Fribbles. Of course, this was when I was 16. Dating has gone kind of downhill from there." —Susie, 42

How long is the actual intercourse part of sex supposed to last? How much is too much?

"Unless in the airplane bathroom, it's nice if an experience (from foreplay to the last shudder) is longer than half an hour. Then again, maybe my standards are too low." —Jen, 27

"When the girl glances over at the clock, it's been too long, and when she says 'Oh?' it was too fast." —Anne, 28

"Foreplay, 30-45 minutes. Penetration, 7-15 minutes. Too long: 20-30 minutes. Ouch." —Susie, 42

"Just enough to get the girl off. Boys, make sure the girl is excited first—we need to be worked up a little bit. We're not asking for hours of foreplay, but give us something." —Heather, 24

"Obviously this is different for every woman, but for me, switching positions at least four to five times, 45 minutes to an hour (this is getting both parties to O once or twice). Quickies should last only about 20 minutes." —Caroline, 25

"Depends. I mean, let's face it, too long and things start being 'uncomfortable.' But then there are those days, maybe a weekend morning, when you feel like the Energizer bunny." —Kim, 35

"It is supposed to last until both people are satisfied, but not a lot of guys seem to know that. It's a big mystery to them. If you reach your 'happy ending' first, you don't roll over and call it a day." —Carol, 25

"When the entire act starts to approach two hours, it's probably time to wrap up." —Laurel, 29

How many previous sexual partners is a good number for a man—i.e., not too few, not Wilt Chamberlain?

"Enough to make you a good lover. If you have only one partner, but that partner teaches you what to do before you get to me, then that's enough. If you have 50 partners and are still not a good lover, then that's a bad sign." —Karen, 31

"I don't think people should ask this question. Everyone lies, and if this is someone that you really like, you are going to feel jealous no matter what. People sleep with people. It's a fact." —Carol, 25

"Somewhere from 10 to 30. I want to know that someone has ridden around the block without training wheels, but they should still have some tread on their tires." —Tina, 33

"I think that experience is good as long as you follow certain rules: 1) There is no one better than your current girlfriend. 2) Never mention how someone else used to do it, or that someone else was more open-minded about sex." —Katie, 25

"Always ask her first, then say less than what she says." —Jen, 27

"An average of one to two per year since high school." —Anne, 28

"Somewhere between a good hockey score and a good football score." —Ann, 26

"For a historical bachelor, three per year is high enough. I don't want to know the actuals. Just lie." —Wendy, 33

"Three is always the right answer." —Sarah, 25

What's the financial cutoff between "dinner" and "a nice dinner"?

"Anywhere we feel like we need to get dressed up for. The desire for the 'nice dinner' has nothing at all to do with latent foodie tendencies in women, and everything to do with the cute dresses we buy assuming an occasion will come up."
—Ann, 26

"$100." —Alex, 34

"50 bucks." —Susie, 42

"If you have to make a reservation, it's a nice dinner, no matter what the price is." —Anne, 28

"Dinner: when they take your coat at the door. Nice dinner: when the waiter comes back after the meal and uses that neat little tool to sweep up the crumbs." —Kate, 24

"Since Boston is so expensive yet so varied in its restaurant rates, it's hard to say. I mean, we could eat a $150 meal at Grill 23 and consider that a nice dinner, but then you could also go to, say, Dolce Vita in the North End and eat for $50, and I'd consider that a nice dinner." —Karen, 31

"Dinner: going someplace and spending any money at all. Nice dinner: When he makes it for you and you spend $7.99 for the wine." —Katie, 25

We already know that size matters, so what's a nice size?

"Six inches. Shorter is OK, but it's a letdown if you get a skinny one. In all honesty, unless it's a pinkie, you get over it real fast. If you dig the guy, you really do forget about size (until you meet a bigger one!)." —Tina, 33

"It's nice to hit between 6 and 8 inches. Maybe it is more the motion of the ocean than the size of the boat. But if you're on rough seas, I'd want a big, sturdy boat."
—Kim, 35

"Five to eight inches, moderate width, maybe even a little wider." —Laurel, 29

"Six or seven inches, measured from the scrotum." —Susie, 42

"I like them big! Eight-plus." —Katie, 25

"More is more." —Jen, 27

"Two inches thick, five to six inches long." —Karen, 31

How long do you wait for a woman to get over her ex, if you otherwise have a good relationship but she's still got ex issues?

"It's all specific to the girl, and although this may go against all of your manly instincts, talk about it. You'll find out." —Leah, 23

"Six months. If she is not that into you at that point, say bye-bye." —Debbie, 32

"If she was the dumpee, six months to a year. If she was the dumper, right away—she was over him a while ago." —Katie, 25

"If you've been with her a while and she's still talking about her ex, she's probably not 100 percent into you. I hate to say it, but that's when you really know you like someone. You totally forget about the ex and you're focused on the new guy." —Caroline, 25

"Longer than you probably want to know. Ex issues can last months, even years. If she mentions her ex every time you see her, or is still talking to him on a weekly basis (including e-mails), get out while you can!" —Susie, 42

"However long the relationship was, the recovery time is half as long. So if they dated for a year, it's six months of recovery for her." —Laurel, 29

After how many dates is it no longer assumed that the guy will pick up the tab?

"Four or five. That said, I have no problem picking up a drink after dinner on the second or third date. But it's important to know if you both have the same outlook on money. I can't be with a guy who's always concerned about what he's spending, because I'm not that way." —Alex, 34

"Donald Trump says that a lady should never pay for her own dinner. Even though he's a trillionaire, he's right." —Adrienne, 25

"After three. The girl should offer on dates one to three, and he should decline. Maybe on date two or three she can buy a round, but he should generally still be paying." —Tina, 33

"I would say after dating heavily for two months, but girls always do the fake wallet reach." —Miti, 25

"When it stops being dating and starts being a relationship." —Ann, 26

"I think that it is unfair for anyone to be expected to pay for the date. We are not in the '50s anymore." —Carol, 25

"Assuming that the guy picks up the tab is ancient. This is the modern world and people split bills unless the other person insists on being generous. And generous is all it would be, nothing else. But for the stupid and/or ignorant people out there, I answer in this way: After you start having sex, it's no longer assumed that the man will foot the bill." —Laurel, 29

"Girls are dating guys who aren't picking up the tab? Ladies, this is unacceptable. My answer: It is never no longer assumed. It should always happen this way. Period." —Kate, 24

How long must you date before dropping a number two at her place (or even at your own place if she's there)?

"When nature calls, you can't put her into voice mail. But I'd say if you can hold out for six to eight weeks that should do."
—Kim, 35

"After sex. Once you get that deep into someone's bodily functions you can't fault them for crapping."
—Sarah, 25

"I'm a little poopie-phobic, so I would say the later the better, say six months to a year. However, you'll know the relationship has potential when you can have a nice, relaxing poo-poo at a girl's house, and she at yours." —Susie, 42

"If you've got to go, take proper precautions to eliminate all evidence. Air freshener, matches, an open window—do what you must. Girls have it in their bathrooms, and so should you, along with toilet paper. These are not unreasonable requests." —Leah, 23

"Dropping a number two is no problem at any time. Just make sure you use the spray!" —Karla, 22

"It's always too soon." —Rachel, 37

What's your favorite excuse to get out of a date?

"My husband is back from his trip." —Jen, 27

"Sorry, I have to work late." —Deniz, 27

"I'm sick." —Karen, 31

"Honesty." —Wendy, 33

"I have to go meet my gay boyfriend at Club Café (I've actually used that one!)" —Julie, 33

"There's a gas leak in my apartment." —Susie, 42

"I have to be home in time to pill my cat." —Kat, 35

"I'm working late. Or working early." —Miti, 25

"In college, it was 'I have a sorority meeting.' Guys were always OK with being cancelled on when they got to imagine you having topless pillow fights with your sisters, à la Animal House." —Kate, 24 iB

MOVING IN WITH HIS GIRLFRIEND REQUIRES SOME BIG ADJUSTMENTS FOR A FORMER SLOB

BY DANIEL SCHULMAN

PHOTOGRAPHED BY TRACY POWELL

he short of it: I met a girl. We fell in love. We rented a quaint one-bedroom from a pushy broker. The long of it: Well, I'm getting to that.

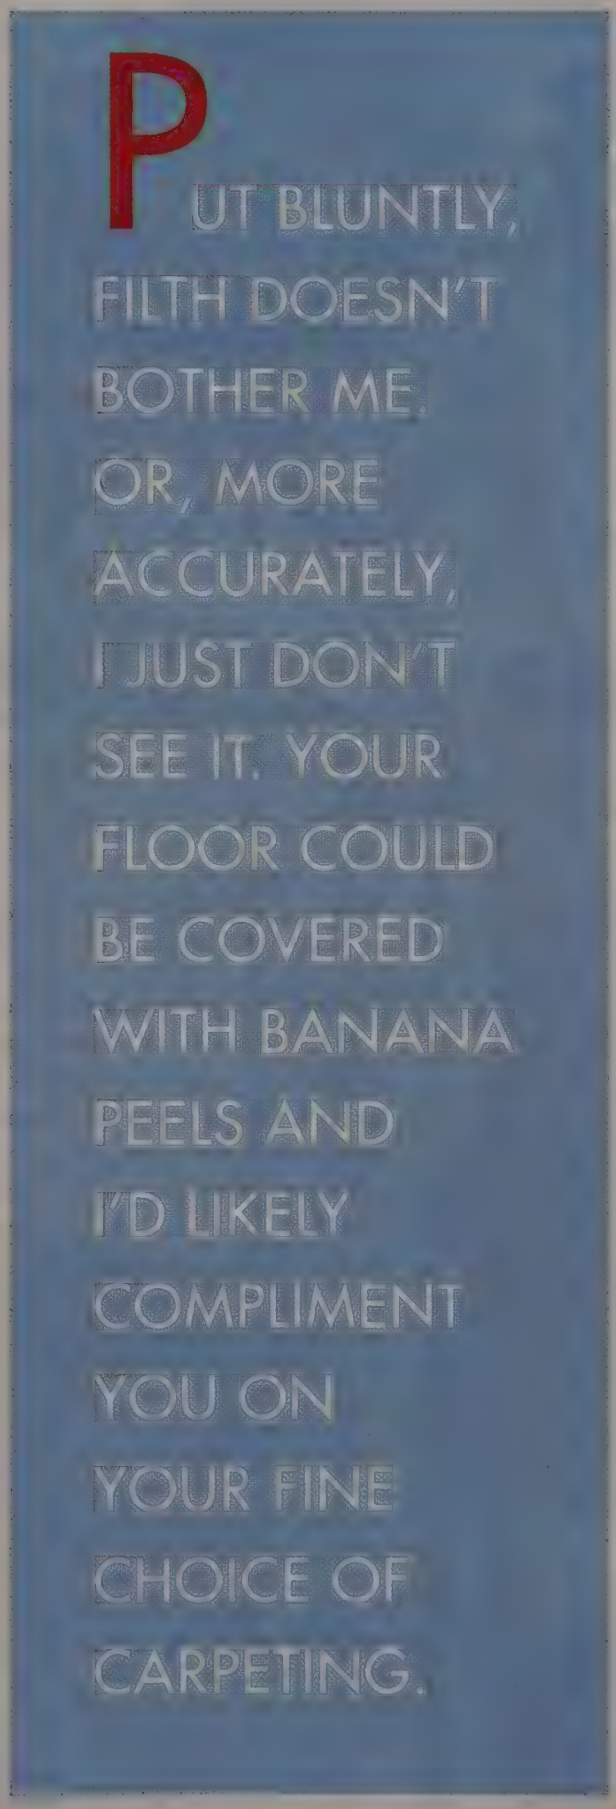
Living together was a fairly monumental step for a lone wolf like me—a guy known to feel caged in by a one-year magazine subscription. Ready to up the ante in our relationship, though not yet prepared to walk down the aisle, my girlfriend and I opted to take the next logical step and make sure we were truly compatible.

The disparities in our outlook on domestic life became evident on move-in day. Searching through a pile of our combined flotsam, I unearthed what I viewed as our most important item, the centerpiece of our household, and began setting up the TV near the cable jack in the living room.

"Honey," my girlfriend called from the kitchen where she was meticulously arranging our flatware, "That's where I'm putting the settee."

"Um, OK," I called back, "Can I just settee the TV on top?" I came to find that a settee is what I'd been mistakenly referring to as a bench. That was only the first of many things I'd learn.

BE NEXT TO GODLINESS



Before moving in with Stacey, I'd always considered myself domestically enlightened. I can cook, clean and launder. Left to my own devices, though, I simply choose not to. Oddly enough, my former roommates considered me something of a neat freak. Those roommates, however, were three twentysomething guys who, in the privacy of our pad, behaved like circus chimps. In those days, housekeeping involved the occasional spraying of Lysol, which I suspected one of my roomies was also using as deodorant.

As you might imagine, cleaning became a major point of contention early on in my live-in union with Stacey. When she griped that I wasn't doing my share of the chores, I responded indignantly, citing the things I did around the house: transferring my clothes from the floor to the hamper, loading the dishwasher, discovering novel places to store our mail. She clued me in that my idea of cleaning was actually picking up. Cleaning, she said, involves actually making things clean—not just creating the illusion of cleanliness.

With another lesson learned, I set about mending my ways, which proved harder than I thought. In attempting to recast myself as Mr. Clean, I immediately ran into a snag. Put bluntly, filth doesn't bother me. Or, more accurately, I just don't see it. Your floor could be covered with banana peels and I'd likely compliment you on your fine choice of carpeting.

Conversely, many women are highly attuned to dirt and disorder. I learned that my girlfriend's mood was directly related to the cleanliness of our home, and subsequently realized that her happiness had a direct effect on my own. Clean equaled content. Dirty equaled…at its worst, a night on the futon.

How did we remedy our housekeeping hang-ups? After a few months, and a few too many tiffs, we devised a system: a list of household chores, divided equally. She has her list, I have mine, and we carry out our responsibilities weekly at the time of our choosing. Honestly, I still have difficulty recognizing dirt and clutter, but with this plan I don't need to: Once a week, filth or no filth, I take the vacuum for a spin around the living room. She's happy. I'm happy.

YOU ARE A WE

Shortly after my girlfriend and I shacked up, I was out carousing with my boys (for whom bachelordom is nearly a religion) and on the receiving end of some serious ribbing. It pretty much amounted to, "Dude, you're basically married. Move to the suburbs already and buy a minivan." Offended by the notion that cohabitation had made me boring and, for lack of a better word, suburban, I replied, "Do married guys get this loaded?" and emptied a beer down my gullet.

Married or not, I had some explaining to do the next morning when a hangover left me physically unable to attend a family gathering at the home of Stacey's parents. Staring somberly at me as she headed for the door, she said, "You really need to be more of a team player." A team player?

As she pointed out, I was having difficulty adjusting to our living situation, a new life founded on shared responsibility, mutual decision-making and the doing of common laundry, in which not holding up your end can be viewed as a lack of commitment, or worse, a breach of trust. I learned this the day that I, still in the habits of single life, did a Dan-only wash, a serious faux pas that I'm still hearing about.

It's embarrassing to admit, but in learning to live as a we, not just a me, I became slightly obsessed with the team metaphor. At one point, while the Sox were making a run for the pennant, I came to view our relationship as a Martinez-Varitek type of interchange. Sure, Pedro's got a trove of nasty pitches, but he'd get a drubbing if Tek weren't calling the shots from the behind the plate. (Just a suggestion: You may choose to view your relationship as a mixed doubles game, with Anna Kournikova as your partner.)

This visualization technique really came in handy when we took a particularly terrifying step in our relationship: opening a joint checking account. The bank representative who assisted us appeared a bit rattled when I kept muttering "be a team player, be a team player," under my breath, but in the end I cowboyed up—more than I can say for our lamentable Red Sox.

THE ULTIMATE COMMITMENT (OR, HOLY CRAPIMONY!)

Not long ago, the (near) Missus and I were embroiled in a state-of-the-union type discussion. The topic turned to commitment (or, as I privately term it, yada yada yada). Somewhere during this conversation, before my brain ran a preemptive stupidity check, I came out with some unadulterated idiocy. My exact words: "But living together is, like, the ultimate commitment." She winced and grew pale. Meanwhile, I paged through my mental Rolodex wondering where I'd be sleeping that evening. As it happened, she took this remark in stride, having earned the experiential equivalent of a Ph.D. in male idiotic behavior after nearly two years of living with me. She explained gingerly, as a teacher might address an especially dimwitted pupil, that the "ultimate commitment" is, in fact, marriage.

While some live-in couples choose cohabitation as an alternative to marriage, others view it as a type of relationship boot camp in preparation for a more substantial commitment. Separately, I think we both identified with the latter category, but broaching the subject proved trying, especially given my debilitating fear of the M-word.

After our first disastrous marriage discussion, the topic surfaced with increasing frequency, which probably stemmed from the fact that my childhood chums were strapping on the world's tiniest handcuff in alarming numbers. Before long, even a passing glance at an advertisement depicting wedding paraphernalia of any sort gave me dry mouth; I took circuitous routes through Downtown Crossing to avoid the dreaded Jewelers Exchange Building. When the subject came up, I often reacted by making a joke of it, as I'm given to do in uncomfortable situations, one time going so far as to say I'd only get married if Emmanuel Lewis and Gary Coleman would act as my groomsmen.

Stacey had little patience for these antics. After all, she wasn't proposing marriage. She simply wanted to gauge my thoughts on the issue and perhaps do a little future planning (i.e., decide when to trade me in for a newer, less sociopathic model).

As we continued to discuss our future, I made an effort to approach the subject with less sarcasm. We devoted our first successful marriage conversation to what we don't want in a wedding, or a marriage.

I'm gradually coming to terms with my trepidation over marriage as I recognize what a simply world-class dame my girlfriend is and realize that letting her slip through my fingers would be a disgrace of Bucknerian proportions. The truth is I haven't yet surmounted my marriage phobia. But I'm getting better. Just last week, while strolling downtown, I passed a jewelry store and didn't even avert my eyes. IB

VOLKSWAGEN TOUAREG V-8 ($43,225 BASE PRICE, WWW.VOLKSWAGEN.COM)

This Teutonic battle wagon looks understated but packs more off-road vitamins and nutrients than 10 bowls of Subaru Outback. With adjustable-air suspension, the Touareg can grow 3.4 inches taller in seconds, like Yao Ming during puberty. The center and rear differentials can be locked via a knob on the console, and the doors feature special seals that allow the vehicle to ford water nearly 22 inches deep, should you ever wish to go fly-fishing from your car. The 310-horsepower V-8 makes guttural, muscle-car noises and keeps the six-speed automatic transmission ripping up through the gears when the throttle is planted. (It's the Volkswagen that does what other Volkswagens can't—haul ass while enraging the Sierra Club!) When we asked a Porsche representative whether he was worried that the fully loaded Touareg ($55,000) might poach sales from the V-8 Cayenne S (the Touareg's Porsche cousin, with a base price of about $55,000), he replied only, "No." Which means yes.

MAKING A GIRLIE-DRINK WITHOUT LOOKING LIKE A TOTAL WUSSBAG

THE TAILGATOR ($369.95, WWW.TOTALLYGROSS.COM) AND KUYA FUSION RUM ($12.99 PER 750 ML BOTTLE)

Does anyone really need a blender powered by a 24cc two-stroke gas engine? We suppose not. You could just guzzle beer and liquor drinks on the rocks at your tailgate parties and on trips to the beach, but where's the noise? And the exhaust fumes? The TailGator turns a pitcher of ice and booze into your favorite smooth-sipping concoction in abut 15 seconds. If they ever ship the TailGator to France, the French will probably resort to calling it "le gas-powered blender," just like other American inventions that are so awesome they defy being described in French, like "le hot dog" and "le hamburger."

Speaking of boozy girl drinks, you may associate rum with fruity punches and beverages shaded by their own pink umbrellas, but according to Kuya Fusion Rum, the rum and Coke is the number one cocktail in the country, and is predominantly ordered by 21- to 29-year-old men. (Don't ask us where their study came from—we're too drunk.) Kuya adds a bit of citrus and spice to the standard rum mix, but still packs a healthy 70-proof alcohol content to get you through those long hours at the air traffic control desk. If you still think of spiced rum as feminine, may we remind you that it is the drink of choice of pirates—no, not that kind of pirate!

LEARNING TO SPEAK DOGLISH

BOW-LINGUAL ($99.95, WWW.THEDOGTRANSLATOR.COM)

If your dog is circling the living room in a pained crouch, you can probably tell he needs to take a crap. But what if he's just pressing his nose against the window and barking? Does he see a squirrel? Is he restless? Is he frustrated because he can only calculate pi to the eighth decimal place in his head? The Bow-Lingual bark translator purports to answer these very questions. A disturbing amount of research went into the Bow-Lingual, which combines voice-pattern recognition technology with canine behavior data to decipher what, exactly, Fido's trying to tell you. Sample phrases include "You just don't get it" and "I'm jealous," which briefly made us wonder if we'd ordered a Girl-Lingual by accident. Does it work? You be the judge. But we will say that when the Westminster Dog Show came on TV, our test mutt took a look at the screen and declared, "I don't like you either." And when begging for pizza, he repeatedly pleaded, "Show me the love." To that we say, "Woof woof, bow wow woof."

FILMING YOUR STAY AT 18 AVENUE DE SUFFREN

PANASONIC SV-AV100 DIGITAL VIDEO CAMERA ($999, WWW.CIRCUITCITY.COM)

Ah, 18 Avenue de Suffren: the Hilton Paris. When you check into this famous Hilton, you'll want to capture every exciting moment for posterity. The Panasonic SV-AV100 is perfect for the busy traveler, fitting in the palm of your hand and recording up to 20 minutes of DVD-quality video (or up to three and a half hours of Web-quality video, although we can't imagine why anyone would need more than a few minutes of that). If you're so excited by the action surrounding the Hilton Paris that you can't focus on your close-up of the Eiffel Tower, the built-in Super Image Stabilizer helps prevent hand jitter from ruining your shot. Unfortunately, the SV-AV100 doesn't provide its own illumination, so make sure it's not too dark out before you give your film tour of Paris the green light.

DRUNK-DIALING YOUR EX IN TOKYO

VONAGE BROADBAND PHONE SERVICE (PLANS START AT $14.99 PER MONTH, WWW.VONAGE.COM)

It's bound to happen sooner or later: You wake up in the morning with the phone in your hand and a vague recollection of an ill-advised late-night conversation with an old flame. And of course, she doesn't live two blocks away, a fact that is reconfirmed when you get your next phone bill and find a charge for $182.63. Ouch. Well, now you can at least avoid the financial pain of drunk dialing by getting an Internet phone service like Vonage. Hook the nifty black box between your high-speed modem and a phone, and your broadband service becomes a way to reach out and touch someone besides yourself. The most basic plan costs $14.99 per month and gives you 500 minutes of nationwide long distance; international rates are similarly wallet-friendly (6 cents per minute to Tokyo). So go ahead and drink too much, order a pizza, and get ready to spill your guts—your talk is a lot cheaper now.

WANT A LEG UP IN THE ROMANCE DEPARTMENT? TAKE YOUR ACT TO THE KITCHEN.

BY GALEN MOORE PHOTOGRAPHED BY TRACY POWELL

The fastest way to a woman's heart is through her stomach. That may not be the way you heard it originally, but it's absolutely true. Of the five senses, taste is the most intimate, and is closely associated with satisfaction and craving. Picking a good restaurant goes a long way, but creating a delicious meal can do far more to help your cause with that special someone.

"Women really appreciate men they can connect with on a sensual level," says Rialto chef and co-owner Jody Adams, who adds that good cooking can be the cornerstone of a strong relationship. "Being able to provide an experience, an atmosphere and an entire evening that you dictate—the food you select, the cooking, the music, the lighting—demonstrates an enormous amount of respect for the person you're doing it for."

That may be true, but if you're a guy who does more heating than actual cooking, the potential for disaster is high. Is it really possible for those of us who aren't Jamie Oliver or Emeril Lagasse to cook a meal that will impress, rather than horrify?

We interviewed some of Boston's average Joes who've tackled the cooking problem and overcome it, and who are now accustomed to romancing dates with their culinary skills. If these guys can do it, so can you.

REPEAT YOURSELF

Ben Wilson got a European culinary education. Well, kind of.

"I never cooked until I spent a junior year abroad in Italy," says the 27-year-old Boston lawyer. There, Wilson's German roommate, Mathias, was an artist who spoke four languages, drove an Alfa Romeo and cooked a gourmet dinner almost every night of the week. As you can imagine, Mathias was a hit with the ladies.

Returning to the United States, Wilson did not go out and buy a sports car. Nor did he learn to paint. However, living with Mathias had taught him how to cook a thing or two. That gave him the confidence to make cooking a part of his dating repertoire.

Wilson, who now lives in the North End, says that so far his results have been pretty good. At least he's avoided disaster. The key, he says, is repetition. "You don't want to be improvising on the fly," he explains. "You need the confidence of having done something already." Wilson has a selection of cookbooks to work from, but mostly he relies on Web sites, like the Food Network site (www.foodtv.com), to find a recipe he's in the mood for. The spontaneity is nice, he says, but sometimes the recipes don't work. "I've had some recent issues with it," he admits. "The recipes aren't always perfect, but then again neither am I."

Wilson cooks for himself whenever he can, to practice. He says the best dishes are ones that are easy, but not too ordinary—salmon with couscous, for example. These workaday preparations can look pretty spectacular by candlelight, he says. While cooking, Wilson always invites his date to sit with him in the kitchen, and even to help with the cooking, if she's so inclined. He never leaves her alone in the living room. "It's a nice place to be together," he says. "You have good smells happening, hopefully."

BROILED SALMON STEAKS WITH SPANISH COUSCOUS

Serves 1 Cooking time: 25 minutes

Salmon:

- 2 salmon steaks, each no more than ¾" thick
- 2 tablespoons cooking oil
- Salt and pepper
- ½ cup dry white wine
- Chopped parsley and lemon wedges, for garnish

Couscous:

- 1 cup couscous
- ½ teaspoon ground cumin
- ½ teaspoon pepper
- 1 cup frozen peas, thawed
- 1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil

1. Fifteen minutes before beginning, set oven to broil. Rub oil on both sides of each fish steak, then dust with salt and pepper. Place steaks in an oven-safe dish, and pour the wine around them. Place under broiler, about 3 inches from heat, and broil about 8 minutes, until fish is cooked through and still juicy. (Cut into it and check if you are not sure.) Turn oven off and set fish in oven with door open, to keep warm until ready to serve.
2. While fish cooks, make couscous according to directions on package, adding cumin and pepper to boiling water along with the couscous. When cooked, toss with peas and olive oil briefly over low heat, and remove from heat.
3. To serve, put a medium amount of couscous on each plate, and place salmon steaks on top, to one side. Pour a small amount of the cooking juices from the pan over steaks, and garnish with chopped parsley and lemon.

✱ Serve alongside a simple vegetable dish, with a bottle of light white wine, such as a sauvignon blanc or a pinot grigio. For an appetizer, simply buy a good olive tapenade and serve with thin slices of French bread. For dessert, a selection of cheeses and fruits will go well with a light meal like this (and will help you finish the wine). Try a Vermont cheddar, a camembert and aged gouda.

KEEP IT SIMPLE

"A lot of guys might want to have pots and pans and a big ensemble of all these things going on," says Shannon Rutherford, a 25-year-old multimedia producer. "At least, that's the way I used to approach it."

Making a big production out of dinner won't necessarily impress a woman, says the Jamaica Plain resident, although he's tried. "What would happen is, I would tell her dinner at eight, and then we wouldn't end up eating until 10." That kept his girlfriend hungry, he says, but it also pissed her off.

Rutherford's new strategy for seduction is to prepare a meal that demonstrates control and command of the kitchen. To that end, he aims to make a meal that's both tasty and healthy in under 30 minutes.

"Most of the cooking times that are given in recipe books seem to assume that you've cooked the recipe before," he says. "It takes a few run-throughs before you can actually cook a meal that says '30 minutes' in 30 minutes."

Prep work, such as peeling and chopping vegetables, is often the most time-consuming task, so tools like a garlic press and a good vegetable peeler are useful. But often, Rutherford just relies on his own ingenuity, rather than following a cookbook recipe. He says he's had the greatest success with recipes like this chicken and pasta dish, which he cobbled together from ideas found in several cookbooks.

CHICKEN FETTUCINE WITH SAGE AND BUTTERNUT SQUASH

Serves 2. Cooking time: 30 minutes

- 3 teaspoons salt
- ½ pound dried fettucine noodles
- ½ butternut squash, pre-peeled and seeded (If you can't find pre-peeled squash, be prepared to take a few more minutes peeling and seeding.)
- 1 large clove garlic, chopped fine
- 2 tablespoons cooking oil
- ½ cup chicken or vegetable stock
- ¼ cup dry white wine
- 1 large boneless chicken breast
- Black pepper
- 3 tablespoons unsalted butter
- ⅓ cup flour
- ⅓ cup fresh sage, chopped
- Additional salt and pepper, to taste
- ¼ cup Parmesan cheese, grated

1. In a kettle, boil water for pasta. Add 2 teaspoons of salt. When water boils, add pasta. Once pasta is tender, strain, run under cold water and set aside.

2. While pasta cooks, chop squash and garlic. In a roomy saucepan, sauté garlic and 1 tablespoon of oil over medium heat for 1 minute. Add squash, stock and wine. Cover tightly and cook until squash is tender, about 10 minutes. Remove from heat.

3. While squash cooks, dust chicken breast with pepper and remaining salt. In a skillet, heat 1 tablespoon of oil and 1 tablespoon of butter together over medium-high heat. Dredge chicken in flour. When the butter stops foaming, but before it browns, add chicken to skillet. Saute 5 minutes on each side, or until cooked through, being careful to reduce heat if pan begins to smoke. Remove chicken from pan and set aside.

4. Chop chicken into bite-size pieces and add to squash mixture along with ¼ cup of sage. Continue cooking over medium heat until liquid thickens noticeably, about 2 minutes.

5. When ready to serve, add pasta and remaining 2 tablespoons butter to squash mixture. Toss over medium heat to mix and heat through. Serve topped with remaining sage and grated parmesan.

A good wine with this dish is a light, spicy red, such as Côtes du Rhone or zinfandel. For dessert, try hot chocolate and cookies. Buy good cocoa (like Ghirardelli), and make or buy the cookies ahead of time.

PRESSURE COOKING

Like dating, cooking is full of potential pitfalls. We asked local cooking instructors Kate Sedan (Cambridge Center for Adult Education) and Terence Janericco (Terence Janericco Cooking Classes) for a few pointers on combining the two.

DO: Find out what she likes. Start a conversation about food. When you deliver the goods, she'll be impressed that you cared enough to discover her tastes and then figured out how to satisfy them.

DON'T: Try to impress her with expensive ingredients. You're not just throwing money at a goal. You're throwing sweat at it. And sweat is sexy.

DO: Clean your apartment, especially the bathroom. Fresh-cut flowers are always a nice touch too. Don't worry if you don't have a vase; just put them in the pitcher you use to play quarters.

DON'T: Go over the top. Candlelight is nice, but strewing the table with rose petals may be going too far.

DO: Pay attention to presentation. Try to serve something colorful, and get some green on the plate — even if it's only a sprig of parsley.

DON'T: Try to sculpt your food. Remember, this is your home kitchen, not the Ritz.

DO: Pick something you're familiar with. This is not the time to experiment.

DON'T: Pick something that requires a lot of last-minute cooking. You don't want to disappear into the kitchen for a half hour while she's cooling her heels on the couch.

And remember, if everything goes up in smoke and flames, you can always order a pizza, and still get an A for effort.

MAKE IT A JOINT PROJECT

A. R. Barrington believes it's usually best to stick with what you know when cooking for a date. "I always want to do something new and interesting," says the 29-year-old Back Bay resident. "But that's a recipe for disaster."

However, that rule isn't so hard and fast if you can convince your date to come into the kitchen and participate in the fun. Barrington says his most successful cook-at-home date happened when he and his girlfriend planned to cook dinner together for the first time. They agreed to make crab cakes—something neither of them had ever tried before.

According to Barrington, who works for a software developer, the crab cake recipe turned out to be ideal. There were plenty of vegetables to chop, keeping them both busy, but nothing too challenging. Then it all had to be mixed and shaped by hand. "We were making a huge mess together," he says. "It was a blast, and afterwards we had a romantic evening."

Be warned, though: Personalities can clash in a small kitchen. In Barrington's case, he and his date turned out to enjoy cooking together, and, he says, "that boded well for the relationship." IB

CRAB CAKES FOR TWO

Makes 6 to 8 small crab cakes. Cooking time: 55 minutes

Sauce:

- ½ cucumber, peeled and halved lengthwise
- 2 tablespoons fresh dill, chopped, plus a few sprigs for garnish
- 3 tablespoons sour cream
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper

Crab cakes:

- 3 tablespoons unsalted butter
- ½ cup onion, finely chopped
- ½ cup celery, finely chopped
- ⅓ cup carrot, finely chopped
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 1 tablespoon dry mustard
- ½ pound lump crab meat, carefully picked over
- 2 tablespoons parsley, finely chopped
- ⅓ cup mayonnaise
- 1 teaspoon lemon juice
- ¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper
- 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
- ¾ cup fine bread crumbs
- 2 tablespoons vegetable oil

1. Make the sauce first: Seed the ½ cucumber, scooping out seeds with a spoon and discarding them. Chop cucumber coarsely. Stir together with dill, sour cream, salt and pepper. Set aside.

2. Sauté onions, celery and carrots in 1 tablespoon of butter over medium heat. After about 3 minutes, when onions start to wilt, add pepper, salt and mustard. Cook until vegetables are tender, about 2 minutes more. Remove from heat.

3. In a mixing bowl, combine vegetables, crab meat, parsley, mayonnaise, lemon juice, cayenne and Worcestershire sauce.

4. Spread breadcrumbs on a shallow plate. Heat vegetable oil and remaining 2 tablespoons butter in a 10-inch skillet over medium heat. Working quickly, scoop 2 tablespoons crab mixture into your hands and shape into patties 1 inch thick. Roll patties in breadcrumbs.

5. Drop patties into hot oil, cooking as many as will fit at once in the pan without touching. Fry about 1 minute, or until golden brown, turning every 15 seconds.

6. Remove and drain on a plate lined with paper towels. Serve immediately, topped with cucumber sauce and dill garnish, alongside a simple salad tossed in good dressing.

An Alsatian wine, such as a dry gewürtztraminer, is a good choice, and for dessert, ice cream always works. If dinner goes well, put on a movie and just grab the pint carton and two spoons.

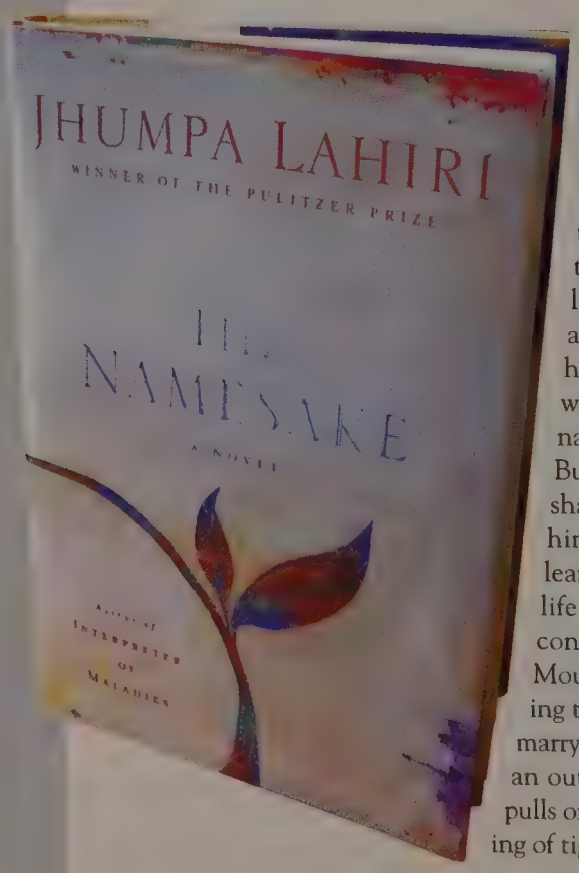
LOVELY RITA, ENVIRONMENT MAID

Buy some "parking tickets" from www.earthonempty.com and spread the word about the downsides of SUVs.

Call them Bradley Shopping Vehicles, those giant, rugged SUVs that brave the wilds of Newbury Street. To draw attention to the crimes and misdemeanors of these automotive behemoths, artist John Tagiuri has designed a replica of a Boston parking ticket that delivers the same orange Ouch! Only this one reads "Violation—Earth" and lists a menu of discouraging, frightening environmental factoids. It appears that Tagiuri has picked some worst-case scenarios to make his point. For instance, he quotes anti-SUV author Keith Bradsher's assertion that "SUVs emit up to 5.5 times as much air pollution per mile as cars." While that statement lumps all SUVs in with the guiltiest offenders, few people would disagree that SUVs aren't as efficient as they could be—they're exempt from the Corporate Average Fuel Economy standard of 27.5 miles per gallon that applies to regular cars. So, if you're in the mood for some Earth-friendly activism en route to work or in the dark of night, you can "ticket" these metal fatties with citations addressed to various government officials.



PEACE AND BEAUTY

Intarawut, at 370 Broadway in Cambridge, features Thai textiles, furniture, sculpture, jewelry and artifacts from Southeast Asia. Open weekends only. Call 617-661-6200.

At the corner where Black Ink once sat comes a shop of exotic flavor—almost a gallery more than a store—run by Kaek Intarawut, from Thailand. Gracefulness reigns here, both in the space's aura and the beauty of the items for sale. A rack of short, kimono-like jackets made by Kaek could almost be seen as an art installation, with shimmering Thai silk capturing two subtle tones in every piece—green whispers into blue, red tilts into gold. Scarves embroidered with traditional Thai designs have a subtle luminosity. Some are woven from hundreds of threads dyed different colors; some depict a Buddhist design, each pattern specific to a village. Loose, black fisherman's pants, made of a fabric called lana, are designed to be wrapped around the waist for a relaxed, even sexy look. Other fabrics here, translucent, subtle and complex, can be used as wall hangings or window treatments. Spare elm chairs have a beautifully distressed antique look. And Buddhas—in marble and wood—exude their serenity in every corner.

NAMES ACHE

The Namesake* is the first novel by Boston University alumna Jhumpa Lahiri, who won the Pulitzer Prize for her short-story collection, Interpreter of Maladies.

Written in an intimately whispering present tense that brings the reader in close, The Namesake concerns the American-raised son of Indian immigrants who live in Cambridge. The boy is quirkily named Gogol, after the Russian writer, because Ashima, the father, had been reading Gogol's The Overcoat years before, when he survived a train wreck that killed many. So the name became a sort of emotional amulet for the father. But unaware of the significance of his name—and to shake off its childhood oddity—Gogol begins to call himself Nikhil as he pursues his American life. As he learns to integrate his parents' Bengali customs with his life as a fledgling New York architect, Gogol/Nikhil reconnects with a childhood friend, a woman named Moushumi who is also of Indian parentage. While pursuing their urban American life, they gratify their parents by marrying. But their respective histories—each something of an outcast and a dreamer in high school—exert opposing pulls on them. Throughout, this beautiful book exudes a feeling of tightly textured sadness.

A TREE GROWS IN BOSTON

The addition of Arbor solidifies Jamaica Plain's standing as a dining destination

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Arbor, on Centre Street in Jamaica Plain, is one of the most appealing and enjoyable restaurants to appear on the Boston scene in some time. Since Douglas Organ, fresh from success in Southern California, opened this gem last summer, he and chef de cuisine Timothy Canning have been turning out imaginatively conceived and skillfully executed preparations for enthusiastic patrons. Arbor joins a number of other new eateries that have turned JP into one of the hottest dining venues in the city. Best of all, the menu prices, substantially below places of comparable or even lesser quality downtown, place Arbor high on the price-quality index.

Organ and Canning work their magic in a small storefront that seats fewer than 40 diners. Fortunately, an inviting bar toward the rear of the dining room looks like a pleasant place to wait, or even dine. A tiny vestibule protects the dining room from the blustery winter winds. The decor is understated but chic, almost Manhattan in feel, with black painted woodwork and paneling below wainscoting, black ceiling fans and long track minispots illuminating the upper part of the walls hung with minimalist but handsome black panels with red geometric lines. Stained, leaded glass above the red entrance door provides a splash of color. Small granite tables are set with gray fabric placemats, elegant, oversized wine glasses, and votive candles.

A coarse-textured semi-sourdough boule bread with wonderfully crisp and chewy crust, supplied by Fornax Bread Company of Roslindale, accompanied a small dish of creamy hummus spiced with smoked paprika and lemon, all bursting with Mediterranean flavors and aromas, a harbinger of delectable things to come. A tasting of six Mezze, or hors d'oeuvres ($16), served on an elongated etched glass platter included Tuscan eggplant and ricotta salad with pine nuts, mellow yet satisfying; basil-cured salmon garnished with radish, fennel, and mustard with piquant overtones of wasabi; savory goat cheese in a tiny wooden bowl shaped like a mortar, deftly dressed with warm, aromatic Provencal herbs and extra-virgin olive oil; Lulu's tchoutchouka, a ratatouille in which exotically marinated and satiny-textured, sweet red peppers dominated; harissa grilled shrimp with a crunchy texture and a tiny dollop of lime-accented couscous; and spiced lamb skewers, tender and juicy, provocatively spiced and accompanied with sweet onion marmalade. In welcome contrast to the regretful practice of throwing together disparate ingredients in one undifferentiated heap, each of these delicacies was carefully presented on the platter without impinging on its neighbors.

Grilled duck foie gras with three garnishes: sautéed apples, beet salad and persimmon coulis

First-course selections included beignets of cod brandade ($9), an enticing puree of salt cod and potatoes, formed into a ball somewhere between a ping-pong and a tennis ball in size, and sautéed to a slightly crisp exterior. A tangy sauce called gribiche—a species of mayonnaise studded with capers, tarragon and lemon—and a small mound of tender, young watercress, were splendid accompaniments. Moving on to main courses, Arbor's kitchen demonstrated versatility in all the major genres—poultry, meat and fish. Grilled Catalán spice–marinated chicken ($19) in a ragout of tomatoes, olives and spicy chorizo was moist and tender, with the provocative sauce complementing the muted flavor of the chicken. Arbor's cassoulet ($22) transported me back to the southwest of France, its heady dose of garlic and assertive herbs enhancing the white beans that play a starring role in this dish, ably supported by rich pork sausage, and not quite as ably by slightly tough pieces of duck.

Parsley-crusted native cod ($21) yielded a thick slab of perfectly textured fish, flaky yet moist, with an extraordinary, toothsome sauce of large capers and brown butter, and a garnish of roasted cauliflower. Finally, but certainly not least, the rosemary-cured pork chop ($21) made its grand appearance, one and a quarter inches thick, pink and tender, accompanied by a delicious mélange of apples, Brussels sprouts and chunks of smoky, pleasantly salty pancetta. Salted and spiced halves of roast fingerling potatoes, cooked to a perfect texture, completed the ensemble.

Arbor sustained its remarkably high standards through dessert. Valrhona chocolate pot au crème ($7), a smooth, almost liquid nectar with intense chocolate flavor, would have satisfied the most unrepentant chocoholic. An imaginative variant on the ubiquitous crème brûlée was Arbor's rice pudding brûlée ($7), a large, shallow cylinder of caramelized rice and custard, its creamy starch and mellow sweetness a good foil to the robust assertive flavors that preceded it.

Arbor's wines included 2001 Col des Vents Corbieres, a serviceable French red composed of grenache, syrah, and mourvèdre, available by the half-liter carafe for only $14. Wines by the glass included a sparkler from—ready for this—New Mexico, NV Gruet Brut ($7), unremarkable but pleasant, and a Côtes du Rhône from Domaine Lafond ($7), a trifle thin but well balanced, with decent structure that made it a suitable companion to diverse dishes. Arbor's service ranged from first-rate to adequate. An uncomfortably long interval intervened between main courses and dessert one night, but on my following visit, efficiency and attentiveness were beyond reproach.

Experience has led me to conclude that restaurants whose views or physical ambience dazzles often fail to impress on the plate and on the palate. Since moving to Boston, I have added an even more reliable corollary to this axiom: Restaurant quality is usually inversely related to the availability of parking. Boston's South End, planted thick with top-notch restaurants, is a parking nightmare. In contrast, parking is ample in the bedroom suburbs, but outstanding restaurants are rare. (Le Soir and a couple of its French siblings in Newton are notable exceptions.) My recent forays to JP seemed to confirm this parking corollary. This lively, somewhat edgy Boston neighborhood has enjoyed a recent infusion of culinary talent and gastronomic resources, but I found trying to secure a parking space on Centre Street daunting. Then, after completing the second of two excellent dinners at Arbor, I discovered that there was ample evening parking just outside its rear entrance, in a lot parallel to Centre Street. This amenity, combined with Arbor's extraordinary food, make it no wonder that this tiny boîte plays to a full house almost every night. iB

Lights out at "Life"

A little less Country, a little more Luxe...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

On television, The Simple Life may be an obnoxious national success, but in Boston's Financial District, the Country Life restaurant has quietly closed its wholesome doors.

"The Big Dig killed us," says Avis Ashton, who for 18 years co-managed the vegan buffet eatery with her husband. Now that the Central Artery above it is being dismantled, the restaurant's location at the intersection of High and Broad streets is prime real estate, and the lease has expired. According to Ashton, "the economy in general, 9/11 and the Atkins Diet" also took a toll on a spot that featured dishes such as spaghetti and wheatballs, vegetarian pot pie, and a brunch of tofu scramble and whole wheat waffles. Longtime fans—including members of the Boston Vegetarian Society, which held a monthly "social dinner" at the restaurant—will be pleased to know that the Ashton family is planning to establish a holistic, vegetarian health retreat in New Hampshire.

Alas, vegan eatery Country Life is alive no more.

SECOND COURSE

Kitchen addiction: When Chris Bussell decided to sell Butterfish, the cozy Cambridge restaurant that's now Craigie Street Bistrot, he thought he'd gotten the restaurant bug out of his system. "I went back to school and completed my degree in philosophy and history at UMass-Boston, but found myself missing the culinary business for some strange reason," he says with a laugh. "Cooking gets in your blood."

So when Terramia owner Carla Gomes approached him with an offer last December, Bussell was happy to get back behind the stove at the North End restaurant. Will he open his own place again? For now, Bussell is happy where he is. "I'm having a great time being back in the kitchen," he says. "I want to do this for awhile, but who knows what's going to happen?"

Well, we know what's going to happen at the new L, formerly Café Louis. Come spring and summer, chef Pino Maffeo expects to put perfume on the menu. Perfume? Waiters wielding atomizers instead of giant pepper mills?

"Seventy-five percent of taste is smell," Maffeo explains. "I've been working on this for 11 years. I want to build a dish minus one important ingredient, then introduce that ingredient through perfume."

As he develops his new menu, Maffeo is also developing his perfumes with essential oils of lime leaf, edible flowers and basil. Just as master perfumers create wearable scents, the chef is fermenting fragrances, working on middle tones, adding warm notes of cinnamon and anise. "It's not a gimmick; it's important that it works," he says. Next up: scratch 'n' sniff menus?

Speaking of new concepts, the Copa Café in Lexington is "undergoing some conceptual changes," according to manager Adam Rosencrance. Currently, the café, which opened to great fanfare as an upscale, European-inspired restaurant featuring elaborately authentic coffee drinks, fine pastries and sophisticated "small plates," is now serving only coffee, tea and pastries. Could it be that the Copa, which often fell short of its grand aspirations, is being shopped around? "I'm unable to comment on this at this time," says Rosencrance. The Copa's downscaled offerings are "temporary," he adds, and the owners plan to "reopen" as a full-service restaurant in the spring.

A more upbeat renovation is almost complete at the Brookline location of Brown Sugar Café, one of the best Thai restaurants in town. Until the Comm. Ave. venue reopens in a week or so, the Fenway-area Brown Sugar is handling the overflow of diehard regulars. IB

Down with Snobbery

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

Don't get me wrong: I think it's great that there's so much excitement about wine nowadays. But really, folks, let's drop the attitude. It's a drink, not an identity badge. If wine's truly something you're supposed to enjoy, why don't we stop judging everyone based on what they choose to drink? It's not a question of what's cool, it's about the flavors you like. Somehow we've all become very relaxed around diverse preferences in clothing, hairstyle, sexual practice and religion. But where wine's concerned, watch out. Get caught ordering the wrong one and you'll be branded a loser and a geek; you may even put yourself out of contention for a second date or promotion.

Is there anything more absurd? As someone who's passionate about wine and spends the better part of every day tasting, thinking about and working with it, I would find the idea of anyone trying to impose their own personal likes and dislikes on others laughable if it weren't so common. Here's a list of sins I've recently heard people ripping others for: ordering the wrong color wine (red's in and there are some who view Chardonnay as a wine fit only for wimps); using inappropriate glassware (as in "How could the idiots who own this place serve wine in that?"); serving wines that are too sweet (because everybody knows that sweetness is too retro for words); choosing a bottle from the wrong region or country ("Chile's just a code word for cheap," I actually overheard an otherwise intelligent person intone); buying a bad vintage ("Doesn't he know that '98 was a wipeout in California?"); and, the all-time capper, selecting the wrong wine to serve with a dish (as in, "Hello, pinot noir doesn't go with swordfish.").

The great thing about all this supposed gaucherie is that the very expression of each judgment itself betrays a profound ignorance, in the "a little knowledge is dangerous" category. Usually some misused and half-understood technical jargon (terroir, residual, malolactic, micro-climate, organoleptic) accompanies each condemnatory utterance. But why waste energy refuting arguments based on false premises when it's so much more satisfying to show your disdain by just drinking whatever you like? If you're convinced that wine is as much about enjoyment as food is, that the bottle you choose is not a crucial statement about your worth as a human being, that you don't need to have mastered "wine talk" to impress people, and that, in fact, there's not all that much you really have to know about the glorious liquid simply to enjoy it, here are a few recommendations sure to irritate any obsessive types who may otherwise plague you, along with some basic information you can use if you want to strike first:

Beaujolais, served cool: Some of the tastiest, juiciest red wine for sheer drinking pleasure produced in all of France hails from this district in the southern part of Burgundy. It's versatile with food, fruity and low in tannin, and also a lightning rod for attracting the most clichéd wine put-downs. You'll be sure to catch attention if you order a glass, but you can head it off by informing your guest that, of course, in France you'd expect it served with a chill, as they're very relaxed about what they drink over there, whereas we're so image conscious that we have to fit all red wines into the same overheated "room temperature" mold.

Riesling from Germany: It's probably going to be sweet, but there's nothing wrong with sugar if it's balanced by acidity and fruit, and it does happen to be among the most adaptable wines with food, particularly the many contemporary dishes that incorporate fruit or sweet flavors themselves in the preparation. So take that, sucra-phobes.

Rosé: Classic European wines are often bone dry, refreshing and just the ticket for dishes like sausages, or cold roasted chicken. They're also great for drinking on a warm day when you don't want the effects of strong alcohol or tannins and you're looking for a little refreshment. This wine style is so out that it's in. Drinking it is sort of a reverse-snob statement; that you're relaxed enough with yourself to have a rosé on the table makes an impression in and of itself. If anyone questions you, just dismiss him or her with a comment like, "Check it out, Tavel ain't no white zinfandel."

Cabernet Franc from the Loire Valley: This is so obscure no one will know what to make of it, although they might object to the less-than-opaque red wine colors. "Chinon's classic," you can tell them, savoring the aroma, "so delicious, so underappreciated."

So the message is, chill and enjoy. And if anyone tries to give you a hard time about whatever wine you're drinking, just tell them I said it was OK. IB

CityScope: Puppet Masters

When you were a kid, puppets were just about the niftiest things around. But for many adults, puppets fall into the same category as clowns, ventriloquist dummies and mimes—childish and slightly unnerving. If you're ready to rethink your stance on puppetry, head to Brookline Village's Puppet Showplace Theatre (the first puppetry center in New England) for its 30th anniversary gala. In addition to plenty of puppet shows, there's food, drinks, musical entertainment, raffles and a silent auction. If you aren't quite up for a gala, there are plenty of other opportunities to reacquaint yourself with the art form—the theater offers performances for adults on a regular basis, including a puppet slam March 20. 32 Station St., Brookline (617-731-6400). 6-9 pm. $25. www.puppetshowplace.org.

CityScope: Do-Gooders Dine Out

It's fun to eat out. But it's even more fun to eat out and know that the money you're spending is helping others at the same time. Two tasting events this month benefit the HIV/AIDS community. The first, March 7 at Mistral, is the kickoff to the IMPROPER-sponsored Dinnerfest 2004, which runs through May. Dinner for a party of 8-12 at more than 30 area restaurants is auctioned off to benefit the Boston Living Center (in lieu of paying the restaurant). The second event, Taste of the South End, on March 16, is a gathering of chefs from 35 South End restaurants at the Cyclorama. Guests enjoy samples from places like B&G Oysters, Perdix, Tremont 647 and Caffé Umbra, as well as beer and wine and a silent auction. Proceeds go to support programs and services at AIDS Action Committee. See CityScope on page 52 for more information.

Mistral chef/owner Jamie Mammano hosts the kickoff to Dinnerfest 2004.

FRI./MARCH 12 AND SUN./MARCH 14

Performing Arts: Splendid China

It seems like an unlikely premise for an opera: Richard Nixon's historic meeting with Mao Zedong in February 1972, which resulted in the opening of China to Western nations. Nixon's a baritone, Henry Kissinger a bass, Pat Nixon a lyric soprano. Intrigued? We are. When stage director Peter Sellars first proposed the idea to Pulitzer Prize–winning author John Adams in 1983, Adams says he was slow to recognize the project's potential. "By 1983 Nixon had become the stuff of bad, predictable comedy routines," he says, "and it was difficult to untangle my own personal animosity…from the larger historical picture." He signed on only after poet Alice Goodman agreed to write a verse libretto in couplets, and the end result became one of the most widely performed operas of the present day. Part epic, part political satire, it examines historical, philosophical and even gender issues. And as Adams himself notes, "Was this not something—both in the sense of story and characterization—that only grand opera could treat?" See for yourself at the work's New England premiere, in production by the Boston Modern Orchestra Project. Cutler Majestic Theatre, 219 Tremont St., Boston (617-824-8000). www.bmop.org. March 12, 7:30 pm; March 14, 2 pm. $24-$85.

Art and Movies: Old-Fashioned Films

[illegible] the end of the Somerville Museum's year-long exhibition, The Lost Theatres of Somerville, the museum is [illegible] showcasing several "lost" films in a vintage-film extravaganza. The night is a throwback to the [illegible] of cinema, when an evening at the movies included more than just a bucket of popcorn, a few trailers [illegible] (Fact: popcorn has been sold in movie theaters since the beginning.) Back then, the show included [illegible], newsreels and some shorts—all leading up to the feature film. The night's lineup of vintage films—all shown in [illegible]—includes a 1946 newsreel called Bikini Atoll A-Bomb Test, a Betty Boop cartoon and a 1949 compilation of [illegible] called Chills and Spills. The highlight is Buster Keaton's 1922 short feature, Cops. Before the movies start, Albert Steg, curator of Zampano's Playhouse, and David Guss, curator of the Lost Theatres exhibit, share their thoughts on the films. The exhibition closes March 28. One Westwood Road, Somerville (617-666-9810). 7 pm. $5.

Books & Poetry: Experts Advise

Long ago, before one of the Calendar Girls was betrothed, she had a experience with a loony roommate who was addicted to self-help books. At the time, she scoffed at those who sought advice from the likes of Tony Robbins and Dr. Phil. Now, a few years later and much wiser, that same Calendar Girl sees the benefits of knowing that men actually are from Mars. This month, a few experts come to town with some advice that might truly be helpful. On March 9, you have two choices: Marilyn Byfield Paul reads from It's Hard to Make a Difference When You Can't Find Your Keys: The Seven-Step Path to Becoming Truly Organized at Newtonville Books; or, for those who've already mastered organization, Frank Nett reads from Retire Sooner, Retire Richer: How to Build and Manage Wealth to Last a Lifetime at the Harvard Coop. And on March 10, Wendy Straker offers advice on how to secure a job in TV, film, magazines, advertising or public relations as she reads from Sexy Jobs in the City: How to Find Your Dream Job Using the Rules of Dating at the Harvard Coop. Help yourself! See Books & Poetry on page 82 for more information.

The following Saturday, March 13, the Boston Center for Adult Education hosts a night of wagering at the aptly named Gamble Mansion. "Gamble at the Mansion" offers blackjack, roulette and other casino games, with the proceeds benefiting the BCAE's educational programs. Just like in Vegas, the BCAE's Back Bay mansion offers the gambler's favorite trifecta: booze, betting and a buffet. —Ezra Dyer

Desert Storm

Hildalgo cowboys up in the sand

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Whatever happened to movies made to appeal to all audiences? In this age of specialization and of bean counters controlling Hollywood's boardrooms, the multiplex has become like cable TV, with most everything targeted to a specific demographic. You've got raunchy comedies for teenage boys, romantic fantasies for preteen girls, chick flicks for women, action movies for college guys, and so on. No wonder most movies are so narrow-minded. They're mortally afraid of alienating their target audience.

As horse racer Frank T. Hopkins, Viggo Mortensen (center) provides much of Hidalgo's charm.

Hidalgo is not the greatest movie ever made, nor is it the most ambitious, but it earns a lot of goodwill for its old-fashioned desire to please the average moviegoer, whether that person is an 8-year-old girl or a 55-year-old man. Like a starting pitcher who throws a complete-game victory—saying "no, thanks" to the relief specialist who pitches only to left-handed hitters during day games on Thursdays—this reality-based tale of a U.S. Cavalry dispatch rider who enters a prestigious long-distance horse race in the Arabian Peninsula in 1890 is a small breath of fresh air.

Viggo Mortensen plays the rider, the legendary American cowboy Frank T. Hopkins. Early in the film, after winning a long-distance race, Hopkins delivers orders to cavalry officers at Wounded Knee that result in the infamous slaughter of the Native Americans there, and the guilt he feels sends him into the wilderness during a stint in a touring Wild West show. By the time my unpleasant flashbacks to the shockingly similar opening of The Last Samurai subsided, Hopkins was sobering up and off to the Middle East with his mustang, Hidalgo, to accept the challenge of a sheikh (Omar Sharif) who invites the cowboy to ride in a 3,000-mile race through what one character colorfully calls "God's frying pan."

As the race plays out, it becomes a chance for Hopkins and Hidalgo to prove themselves to the movie's Arabians, who rate horses (and people) by bloodline, and for the movie to throw in the sort of outlandish obstacles that would have been screamed out with exclamation points in a 1940s movie trailer ("Sandstorm! Locusts! Quicksand! Kidnapping attempts! Near-castration!"). These Saturday-matinee escapades give Hidalgo the unassuming fun of The Scorpion King—though this film is less comedic in intent and less lean—while the bonding of man and horse comes off with a more effective and lighter touch than it did in Seabiscuit. That's despite the fact that writer John Fusco wrote the dippy horse cartoon Spirit: Stallion of the Cimarron. (Hidalgo occasionally lapses into that movie's cuteness when the horse is onscreen.)

Much of this movie's charm comes from Mortensen, who in his first starring vehicle brings an appealing modesty to Hopkins. Mortensen is content just to play his part in the story, and he never showboats. Despite a couple of overdone CGI flourishes involving a sandstorm that looks more like a tidal wave, and two hungry leopards, Hidalgo shares its star's meat-and-potatoes style. While it starts with many movie clichés about exotic places in olden times, it chips away at those stereotypes, and such characters as a ruthless English aristocrat (Louise Lombard), the sheikh's stifled daughter (Zuleikha Robinson) and Hopkins' main rival in the race (Said Taghmaoui) evolve as the story progresses. Director Joe Johnston also shows respect for his characters and his audience by having Native American and Arabian characters often speak in their first language, with subtitles. And, as the sheikh with a secret obsession with the Wild West, Sharif gives a sly and amusing performance.

Although Hidalgo bases its exploits on Hopkins' own life story, the film is obviously cut from very broad cloth. It gilds its proverbial lily with the kidnapping attempts and natural disasters, as if the race is not enough to thrill the audience. Also, it turns out there's some doubt as to whether Hopkins, who died in the 1950s, actually did many of the things he later claimed in speeches and in his unpublished memoirs. A group called the Long Riders Guild recently found no evidence of a race from Galveston to Rutland that Hopkins claimed to have won, and that the movie mentions. But white lies aside, this is one tall tale that measures up nicely. IB

Against the Ropes ★★
You have to wonder why Paramount would decide to make a movie about Jackie Kallen, one of boxing's most successful female managers, and then fictionalize just about everything in her life story. Meg Ryan has the flat Midwestern accent down and she fills out Kallen's trashy outfits well, but this female empowerment story turns into a pile of convention and cliché, from the big-fight ending to the slow clap of approval and the freeze-frame ending that top off the resolution. If it trivializes its heroine, why in the world should we care? (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Along Came Polly ★★
That old Hollywood myth about opposites attracting gets a serviceable but unremarkable treatment in this Ben Stiller–Jennifer Aniston romantic comedy. He's a risk-averse analyst for an insurance company whose new wife (Debra Messing) leaves him for another man on their honeymoon; she's a ragamuffin who never plans anything in advance. When he has to choose between the two, which TV star will Ben spend the rest of his life with? This is just the latest in the growing list of "put Ben Stiller in uncomfortable situations" comedies, and unfortunately, it often plays more like Duplex than Meet the Parents. It's buoyed somewhat by the amusing supporting performances of Philip Seymour Hoffman, Alec Baldwin and Hank Azaria. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Battle of Algiers ★★★½
This 1965 look at the 1950s Algerian uprising against French colonials is one of the great docudramas. Now in re-release, the movie's realism is still bracing, and its "real" violence is still jarring and disturbing. The movie has only become more morally complex over time, as it asks us to sympathize with revolutionaries who, essentially, perform terrorist acts. The movie is too intense and immediate to come off as preachy, though. (At Kendall Square.)

Big Fish ★★★
Forget about the present-day drama between a blustery, dying Southerner (Albert Finney) and his semi-estranged grown son (Billy Crudup) in Tim Burton's latest. The real action is in the tall tales about the dying man's earlier life. These sequences featuring Ewan McGregor are the first thing anyone will remember from this movie. Burton gives these scenes an eye-popping heightened reality, while McGregor's lively performance might remind you of another optimistic dreamer from a Burton movie—Johnny Depp's Ed Wood. With his performance as a swaggering, Camelot-era man-about-town in Down with Love and now this role, McGregor has improbably shown himself to be a crackerjack portrayer of American gumption. The rest of the movie falters, but McGregor's scenes are bull's-eyes. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

City of God ★★★½
A quartet of Oscar nominations has brought back this Brazilian drama, one of last year's highlights. Bold and brutal from start to finish, its dog-eat-dog world and stylistic energy recall Mean Streets and Amores Perros as its stories criss-cross and bubble into each other, and as 18-year-old hero Rocket (Alexandre Rodrigues) tries to get out of his crime-rocked neighborhood alive. Full of humanity, ambiguity and belligerence, it's a wonderfully orchestrated car crash you just can't take your eyes off of. (At Copley Square, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Cold Mountain ★★½
With its romance set against the backdrop of war, its female bonding and its overgroomed star, Anthony Minghella's adaptation of Charles Frazier's novel is one part Last of the Mohicans, one part Fried Green Tomatoes and one part infomercial for whatever line of cosmetics Nicole Kidman is wearing. By default, this is the best of the season's big dramatic epics, clearly besting The Last Samurai and House of Sand and Fog. Much of it works: the budding romance of Kidman's and Jude Law's characters interrupted by the Civil War, the strife that besets all the characters because of the war, the supporting characters played by the likes of Philip Seymour Hoffman, Natalie Portman, Ray Winstone and Jack White of the White Stripes. But while Kidman's minister's daughter has her civilized life collapse around her and gets pushed to the brink of starvation and poverty, before being aided by Renee Zellweger's Ma Kettle–meets–Peppermint Patty farmgirl, the actress always looks as if she's made up to go shopping. It's hard to feel her plight in your gut because of it. (At Copley Place, Fenway and suburbs.)

lar 1987 movie is actually a pleasant surprise. Set in late-1950s Cuba on the eve of Castro's revolution, it offers another story about a "nice girl" (Romola Garai) who comes of age through hip-grinding dancing and romance. In this case, it's the daughter of an American businessman who starts sweating the nights away with a local boy (Diego Luna), and her story is convincingly and solidly told. But adding an odd taste is the occasional presence of the original's Patrick Swayze. You could snip out Swayze and the plot wouldn't be affected, and we're never even told if he's playing the same character as in the original. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Eurotrip ★★

Not horrible, but not good either, this melding of Road Trip and National Lampoon's European Vacation at least has the nerve to be R-rated, but it's little more than a series of clichéd gags about Europeans (oh look, soccer hooligans!). And it expects us to root for its characters, but they're such stock characters that pulling for them is a difficult leap of faith to take. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

50 First Dates ★½

What can you say about a movie set in Hawaii with a predominantly reggae soundtrack? (Besides "Hawaii is 4,000 miles away from Jamaica!" and "Not all music by darker people from island cultures is interchangeable!") The dimwittedness extends far beyond the soundtrack, though. In the first 10 minutes alone, you get animal jokes, kid jokes, the most telegraphed vomiting gag ever committed to film, an old guy who curses and Rob Schneider. After that opening, the rest of the movie doesn't stand a chance. It doesn't deserve one, either. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Fog of War ★★★

In Cambridge moviemaker Errol Morris' series of interviews with former JFK and LBJ secretary of defense Robert McNamara, the shrewd technocrat doesn't unburden himself of any more responsibility for the Vietnam quagmire that occurred under his watch. McNamara is too cagey for that. But Morris finds fertile territory in McNamara's observations on human nature, war and politics. (Morris has subtitled the movie "Eleven Lessons from the Life of Robert S. McNamara.") When McNamara talks about the Vietnam effort failing because the American government didn't know enough to empathize with the Vietnamese, it's hard not to think of Iraq. And when McNamara talks about the moral dilemmas of making decisions in times of strife, he sheds light on all the political crossroads that have turned presidents' heads gray. More than a dry Q&A, Fog unfolds in Morris' typically cinematic style, featuring montages of archival footage, cockeyed camera angles and Philip Glass' churning music. (At Kendall Square, Copley Place and Coolidge Corner.)

Girl With a Pearl Earring ★★

Based on Tracy Chevalier's novel, this film puts a speculative backdrop tale to Johannes Vermeer's 1660s painting. As director Peter Webber strives to get the Dutch master's lighting and composition just right, his poor characters walk around in a stiff, humorless daze, and the story turns stilted in no time. The movie's Vermeer is just a garden-variety tortured artist, in this case tormented by the bourgeois wife (Essie Davis) and mother-in-law (Judy Parfitt) who push him to paint more and earn more. His household's new maid (Scarlett Johansson) puts no such demands on him, and the pair start a secret friendship that leads to her ... for the famous portrait. Although the relation... between the sexes and between the classes can ... interesting here, the central pair's sexual tension is ... with pregnant pauses and symbolism (like ...'s penetrating piercing of the maid's ears) that this overripe melodrama is almost instant self-parody. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Good Bye Lenin! ★★½

A loyal East German goes into a coma just before the Berlin Wall falls, and when she has to lead a stress-free life after she comes to, her son goes to great lengths to make sure she never knows that her Communist country doesn't exist anymore. This great premise yields some amusing moments, but also some disappointing ones. Unlike in Billy Wilder's brilliant One, Two, Three (which covered similar territory after the wall went up), the comedy here never quite hits high gear because the story tempers that comedy with shades of drama. But the characters' family drama never becomes as memorable as the premise. (At Kendall Square.)

Monster ★★

No matter how hard it tries, and no matter how successfully Charlize Theron transforms herself into less attractive, much rougher Aileen Wuornos—the prostitute executed by Florida for killing seven men—this docudrama isn't nearly as sympathetic or as interesting as Aileen Wuornos: The Selling of a Serial Killer, Nick Broomfield's decade-old documentary. In the docudrama, Wuornos is a much-abused woman who decides to try her luck with women after she meets a younger lesbian (Christina Ricci). But with no other way to make money, she keeps hooking, and after a john gets violent, she kills him in self-defense. Then she continues to kill. Although you feel her rage, the movie's Wuornos is a little too dumb to sympathize with (she keeps riding around in her victims' cars), and Theron fails to provide the spark that might make her more fascinating than stupid. The movie also puts all its emotional eggs in the basket of the doomed lesbian affair—which fails to be the riveting tragedy writer-director Patty Jenkins wants it to be. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

My Architect ★★★

Much like last year's The Stone Reader, Nathaniel Kahn's new film is documentary as compelling quest. Kahn's mission is to learn more about his father, architect Louis Kahn. The elder Kahn died in 1974, when Nathaniel was a boy, and it turns out he had three families that he juggled. (He remained married to the same woman, while fathering children with two others.) The movie's drama is in its depiction of someone who was world-class in his field, yet whose personal life was a farce. The filmmaker struggles to understand how his mother and Louis Kahn's other families could tolerate such a situation, as he, like them, expresses his love for the man. With no easy answers, Kahn is left to look for answers in his father's work, a search that takes him from Philadelphia to Bangladesh. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Starsky & Hutch ★★★

I never had any desire to see Starsky & Hutch on TV. But with Ben Stiller and Owen Wilson in the title roles and the action played intentionally for laughs, I was there. And I was rewarded. The two stars bring just the right daffy charm to the buddy-cops—one intense, the other laid-back—as the partners go after smug cocaine kingpin Vince Vaughn. You get Tab, muscle cars, afros, Jewfros, tube socks, disco, freedom rock, Rhoda head scarves and other 1970s cheese while S & H prowl the mean streets of Bay City with the help of Huggy Bear (Snoop Dogg). Think of The Brady Bunch Movie with guns. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Aussie rockers Jet blast into Anglo-American consciousness

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

If television ads for the Apple iPod caught your ear in recent months, the odds are that you've been hooked by Jet's "Are You Gonna Be My Girl?", a punchy rocker with a guitar riff reminiscent of Iggy Pop's "Lust for Life."

Just don't expect the rising Australian band to apologize for selling the song to Apple or to think Iggy Pop should split any royalty checks for "Are You Gonna Be My Girl?"

"I'd like to see him try," says Cam Muncey—who co-wrote the song with fellow guitarist-singer Nic Cester. "That's like the rhythm," he says of the riff. "Motown used that before."

As for the iPod opportunity, Muncey adds, "It's tough to break America, and we just knew [the song] would get out to a lot of people real quick. We'd be pretty cynical if we sold millions of albums and went and did an ad. It's not cashing in here. We're talking about a band on the run."

The band never even got free iPods, which may have helped store all the songs from the Beatles, the Rolling Stones, AC/DC, the Who, Small Faces, Bachman-Turner Overdrive and Oasis that Jet could also be accused of mining for ideas.

Not that recycling is a negative in this case. "We all stand on the shoulders of everything that's come before us," Muncey says from a tour stop in England, where Jet's debut album, Get Born, crashed the Top 20. "No musician I know lived in a cocoon. Everything you listened to from when you were a kid on up goes into your subconscious.

"A lot of the reason we love the Beatles and the Stones is it's all about the songs, especially in the '70s and '60s, with great melodies," he says. "That's where we wanted to see our music."

"We just wanted to be raw and stripped back," adds Muncey, 24. "We definitely wanted to get all vintage gear and guitars, because it has a warm, good sound. A lot of the time, old [stuff] has that soul to it, like an old wine."

Muncey launched Jet with brothers Nic and drummer Chris Cester in the suburbs of Melbourne when the three were still in high school. "Just rehearsing in garages," Muncey recalls of the group, which added bassist Mark Wilson. "It's been a long time, but we sort of know each other really well now."

Seven years later, Jet is finally able to tour the globe. "There's no reason that a good album shouldn't translate everywhere in the world," Muncey says. "Japan was pretty crazy. People were waiting for us at the airport and train station. Everywhere we went, there was a camera in your face. In England, they're singing every song back to us."

In America, Jet is part of the Aussie Invasion bill that rolls into Avalon March 19 with the Vines and the Living End. "We think the name's a bit dorky, but it's a good bill and you're getting a fair bit for your fee," Muncey says. "Then you can come backstage and laugh at our accents."

"The Vines are good friends of ours, drinking buddies, and our careers have taken off at the same time," he says. "A lot of their stuff is pretty rooted in melodies, so we've got that in common. But if you play our records back-to-back, I don't think they sound at all similar."

One thing the bands don't have in common is an attraction to grunge (the Vines have frequently been compared with Nirvana). "I listened to a lot of Nirvana when I was young," Muncey says, "but when we sat down to write music, we didn't have that angst or tendency toward despair. We're much more optimistic people. We come from a different place."

What's most surprising about Get Born is the way hard-rocking tracks like "Are You Gonna Be My Girl?" "Rollover DJ" and "Cold Hard Bitch" stand next to ballads like "Radio Song" and the McCartney-meets-Oasis "Look What You've Done," which features bassist Wilson on piano.

"The sort of records we like are the ones that have more than one dimension," Muncey says. "But not all the time. I like the Strokes' first album, which comes from pretty much the same bag. That's cool, 'cause they do it well. To keep us interested, we like to mix it up, and we're not in one mood all the time."

"Some people dig one thing or the other—that's true. But there are enough rocking songs and enough ballads on the album to please everybody," he says. "Next album, get ready for more of it. We do what we want to do, and what we think people are gonna like. Basically, we give the people what we want." iB
